Ten Killed As $500,000 Stratoliner Dives 2 Miles

(Picture on Page 10.)

By International News Service.

Seattle, Wash., March 18.—Giving a tragic setback to aviation's new era, the huge $500,000 Boeing stratoliner, America's newest and most daringly designed air transport, crashed to earth this afternoon, carrying two Dutch air executives and eight Boeing employes to their deaths.

Rumors of possible sabotage were rife as R. D. Bedinger, regional supervisor of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, sped to the scene of the crash at Alder, Wash., where the wreckage was closely guarded by State highway patrolmen.

Possible repercussions were seen in the presence aboard the ill-fated craft of A. G. Baumbauer, aeronautic official of the Dutch government, and P. Guilonard, believed to be an executive of the big Dutch airline, K. L. M.

Recalls French Incident

Their presence on the experimental flight, not revealed till some time after the crash, recalled the recent furor over the revelation that a French air official was aboard a test plane, designed for the Army, that crashed recently in southern California.

Although the stratoliner, one of six being built for Pan-American Airways and TWA, embodied no military secrets, it was of new and most radical design, representing America's latest ambitious bid to keep her leadership in aviation. It had not yet been licensed by the Government.

Mystery was injected into the foreigners' presence aboard the stratoliner with the revelation tonight that they were visiting the coast secretly.

E. A. Van Der Spec, Dutch consul at Seattle, said he had received a letter from Dr. Van Baumbauer, a brother of the victim, dated February 28 from Amsterdam. The doctor wrote that his brother and C. A. F. Falkenhauer, assistant inspector of the government airworthiness board, were leaving for Santa Monica, Calif., to visit the Douglas Aircraft factory "on an important government matter."

Started Senate Probe

It was on a test trip from the Douglas plant that the Army plane carrying the French official crashed several months ago, precipitating a Senate investigation of the sale of American secrets to foreign governments.

The Dutch consul said the men apparently were making a secret visit to the coast; that they had not visited him and that he had not been informed of their visit to the Boeing plant.

The victims of the stratoliner crash, as announced by Boeing officials, were:

America Acts on Subsidized Goods; Sharp Protest on Czechs to Be Sent

By William V. Nessly,
Post Staff Writer.

The United States acted forcefully against the Nazi regime in Germany yesterday by imposing a 25 per cent penalty duty on many of the products that country exports to America. It thereby struck to curb the foreign trade without which Chancellor Hitler has declared the present Reich government "must die."

"Countervailing duties" — called for under the 1930 tariff act whenever it shall be determined that goods exported to this country are subsidized by the exporting country—were placed on German trade after Attorney General Murphy had ruled that products imported under barter arrangements should be subject to the extra tariffs.

Day's Developments

A day of tension over the Hitler "march to the East" brought these additional developments here:

The State Department was preparing a formal reply to German notification of seizure of Czecho-Slovakian territory—a reply expected to include an energetic protest against Berlin's course and refusal to recognize her assumption of authority over the seized areas.

Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee announced he would introduce tomorrow a substitute neutrality act that would permit sale of American munitions on a "cash-and-carry" basis to all nations seeking them.

Backers of the war referendum proposal pending in Congress said they would press for early action, in view of the threatening foreign picture.

To help stop "suicides" resulting from the German conquest, Senator Thomas (Democrat) of Utah drafted a bill to repatriate "several hundred" former American citizens who had returned to their prior homes in Czecho-Slovakia.

Official quarters in Berlin said they were "mystified" by imposition of the penalty tariffs by the United States but deemed it intended to show American disapproval of the German expansion course of the last few days.

Barter Widely Used

Barter, the lifeblood of the German foreign trade system, has been used extensively in getting German products into American countries, in the face of this Government's strenuous efforts to combat it through Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade agreement program.

It was estimated that close to half of the $64,537,000 German exports to this country in 1938 were products which would be subject to the penalty tariff. It is known that German negotiations have been under way with numerous farm cooperatives and other organizations seeking to increase the trading of American farm products for German

Anthony Eden:

Unity Vital to Britain, 3 Parties Warned

ANTHONY EDEN, former secretary of state for foreign affairs of Great Britain, is one of the European statesmen contributing to the special news commentary service on current European developments appearing exclusively in Washington in The Post.

By Anthony Eden,
Former Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain
(By Wireless and Special Wire to The Washington Post.)

London, March 18.—No words are needed to emphasize the gravity of the times. Events give their own message and it is stark and ominous. No illusion is now anywhere possible. Both in its policy and by its methods the Nazi government of Germany has set an example of ruthless brutality which has few parallels in history. It is now universally recognized that while the spirit of such a regime prevails no country's liberties are secure.

EDEN

However intense our feelings, it is of the first importance that we should note with clarity the main lessons that have to be learned, and determine without delay the steps to be taken. Whatever differences there may be as to Czech policy before Munich, there can be no dispute that since that agreement the government of that unhappy country stopped at nothing in its endeavor to mollify its German neighbor. Yet these concessions were of no avail to the Czech people. Their fate was predetermined. Despite the German chancellor's undertaking, plainly stated to the prime minister of Great Britain, that he had no wish to incorporate non-German territory within the boundaries of the Reich, German troops actually crossed the Czech frontier while the president of that country was on his way to make one more appeal for his menaced people.

The pretext employed to excuse the inexcusable only makes matters worse. The picture is painted to us of the alleged sufferings of a German minority in the Czech state. No shred of evidence is brought forward to substantiate these charges and the reason for this failure can be simply stated: No such evidence exists. On the contrary with the passage of time the tactics employed become ever more blatantly apparent.

A campaign of provocation, by a small minority from within stimulated by assistance from without, was unscrupulously explained. The first lesson then that we need to note is that this method is capable of further abuse. Now, at least, all are forewarned.

After such an experience how can

Cabinet Considers Backing Rumania, Hears Nazis Have 44 Divisions Ready

By Joseph Driscoll.
Special Cable to The Post.

London, March 18.—Grave reports that Germany had served a menacing ultimatum upon Rumania, designed to reduce King Carol's country to economic vassalage to Chancellor Adolf Hitler's Reich, resulted in an emergency meeting of the cabinet at the prime minister's residence, 10 Downing street this evening.

Prime Minister Chamberlain was in his old home town of Birmingham, celebrating his seventieth birthday and receiving a present of a gold clock from his constituents, when he was summoned to a telephone.

At the other end of the wire in London was his foreign secretary, Viscount Halifax, who advised him that the rumors regarding Rumania's predicament, although officially denied, were too serious to be ignored and should be the subject of immediate cabinet discussion.

Consider Warning Hitler

Chamberlain authorized such a meeting and, accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain, boarded the first train back to London. Within a few minutes after he had hung up his hat and umbrella at No. 10 he was presiding over an anxious meeting in the cabinet room.

The question before the cabinet was whether Britain and France, even at the risk of a second World War, should jointly warn Hitler that Rumania would be his Waterloo, or whether they should continue their policy of strong talk and weak action, and allow Rumania to go the way of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, and supply Germany with the oil and grain the Nazi military machine so badly requires.

For two hours and twenty-five minutes the cabinet members argued the pros and cons of this question. No decision was announced when the meeting broke up at 7:25 p. m.

A government spokesman said the prime minister was remaining in London over the week-end contrary to his practice in normal times, and the rest of the cabinet had instructions to stand by and remain within reach of a telephone.

May Speak Tomorrow

A regular weekly meeting of the cabinet is scheduled for Wednesday, but it is likely the prime minister and his lieutenants will get together before then. Chamberlain may have an important statement to deliver in the House of Commons on Monday.

In the meantime, Britain is sounding out Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Eire as to whether they would back up Britain with men and material in the event Britain and France should decide to fight for Rumania if necessary.

The United States also is being sounded out as to what degree of co-operation or "parallel action" may be expected from her if the

Berlin Recalls Ambassador From London to Report

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 18.—Germany tonight promptly rejected British and French denunciations of her conquest of Czecho-Slovakia, declaring they "lacked every political, legal and moral basis."

At the same time, Chancellor Hitler called home his Ambassador to London, Herbert von Dirksen, "to make a report," reciprocating action taken by Britain yesterday in calling her Berlin envoy back to London.

(France, following Britain's lead, also called her Berlin Ambassador home "to report.")

The government announced that its rejection of the British and French denunciations had been delivered to the British and French ambassadors, who earlier in the day had presented notes charging that Germany's course in Czecho-Slovakia was illegal and a violation of the Munich agreement.

Nazi Diplomats Unperturbed

These developments occurred as reports of consternation came from European states within reach of the expanding Nazi empire. The foreign office watched the gathering cloud of criticism imperturbably.

The controlled press bitterly threw back criticisms to the democracies.

The National Zeitung of Essen, in which Field Marshal Hermann Goering is interested, said in its Sunday edition that "examination in Prague of certain political documents in the last few days has demonstrated forcefully the hypocrisy of the English policy in the (Czecho-Slovak) question."

It added Germany had sought Britain's friendship for years and received threats for an answer, "therefore one should not be surprised in London if Germany draws therefrom suitable conclusions.

"Against the entirety of threats, Germany places the entirety of her defense."

"Significant" Data Found

Voelkischer Beobachter also spoke of documents found in Prague which it said would play a "significant role in the history of these moving times."

Tonight the returning British envoy, Sir Nevile Henderson, departed for London to report on developments in central Europe.

(In London it was said Von Dirksen, Ambassador to Britain since last April 1, was expected to leave Sunday. In addition to reporting on Britain's reaction to Germany's

Rumania Studies Nazi Trade Demand, Strengthens Border

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, March 18.—Trade negotiations given new significance by Nazi erasure of Czecho-Slovakia proceeded intensively today between nervous Rumania and expanding Germany.

King Carol, considering Germany's new position from the military as well as the economic standpoint, called in high army officials to advise the crown council on Rumania's course.

The trade negotiations, which diplomatic circles in London and Paris viewed as holding important and even alarming political significance, were being conducted with Dr. Helmuth Wohlthat representing Germany.

Ultimatum Denied

A general nervousness indicated all was not going well with the trade discussions. There were many points of difference.

Foreign Minister Grigore Gafencu insisted, however, Germany had presented nothing amounting to an ultimatum.

He pointed out that German official sources had denied that any extraordinary pressure was being brought on this Balkan kingdom of rich economic resources.

Grumble at Barter

In London, a spokesman of the Rumanian Legation said his government had received and rejected sweeping demands by Germany for complete economic co-operation as the price of Nazi guarantees of Rumania's territorial integrity.

(The Rumanian minister was reported to have informed British Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax of his nation's concern over possible German aggression and that

Chamber Grants Premier Powers as Carol Asks Paris to Help Resist Nazis

By Charles S. Foltz, Jr.,
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, March 18.—The Chamber of Deputies voted Premier Daladier unprecedented dictatorial powers tonight as informed quarters disclosed a French-British move to enlist Soviet Russia's aid in a front against German economic pressure on Rumania.

The sweeping decree powers Daladier demanded to enable France to move as fast as the dictatorships passed by a vote of 321 to 264 in the Chamber. Senate approval at tomorrow's session was considered a foregone conclusion.

In another move to put the nation's defenses in order the premier called an emergency cabinet session for tomorrow at which, members of Parliament said, he will ask approval of decrees calling to the colors specialists from a number of military service classes.

Carol Asks Support

French sources said, meanwhile, that King Carol of Rumania had advised Britain and France of his willingness to resist Adolf Hitler's eastward drive if they could provide for Rumanian exports of which Germany now is the greatest purchaser.

The Rumanian monarch was said to have asked Paris and London for a reply within four hours on what support they could give.

Thereupon the two governments, these sources said, asked Moscow if the Soviet Union would join them in buying from Rumania.

[Soviet Russia has more than 1,000 airplanes and at least 500,000 men massed within striking distance of the Rumanian frontier, the International News Service stated it learned tonight by telephone from Moscow.

[The Soviet Union, according to this source, will undoubtedly assist Rumania if Great Britain and France go to her defense against Germany. Indeed, it was deemed possible Russia might aid the Rumanians in any event.—Editor's note.]

Powers Sweeping

Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet conferred in quick succession with the Rumanian Ambassador, former premier George Tatarescu, British Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps and Jacob Surits, Soviet Ambassador.

The Chamber's final vote of approval on the decree powers which would give Daladier dictatorial rule until November 30 was the fifth vote of confidence received by the premier in a single day's session.

He posed the question of confidence for the fourth time when he asked the Chamber to reject a leftist amendment to a bill which would have prevented interference with "public liberty" by decree. The amendment was rejected, 321 votes to 261.

A. F. of L. Calls C. I. O. 'Red;' Rejects Peace

Insists Lewis' Unions Make Unconditional Surrender

By International News Service.

In a bitter statement proclaiming its independence, even at the cost of continued labor warfare, the American Federation of Labor last night charged the Congress of Industrial Organizations is "infiltrated with Communism," and sharply announced its rejection of peace through an all-American merger of labor.

With announcement of its rejection, made behind closed doors in New York recently, and until last night secret, the A. F. of L. high command served notice it would accept no labor peace unless deserting C. I. O. unions return to the Federation under strict terms of its own.

In this connection, it submitted a "six-point formula for settling the controversy with the C. I. O."

The Federation solemnly warned against deliverance of labor into Government hands and pointed to the baleful example of labor in "totalitarian states."

The peace plan of the C. I. O., projected 11 days ago at the White House, before the desk of the President, the A. F. of L. termed Communist inspired and "identical" in meaning with unity proposals "made by the Communist Party, with Moscow's approval, two years ago."

The labor peace conference, called on direct appeal of the President, is scheduled to be resumed here next Friday.

High CIO spokesmen rallied to a quick counter-attack and charged the Federation with rash "breach of faith" in violating a covenant of secrecy regarding proceedings at

Madrid to Open Peace Talks Immediately

Will Seek Only an 'Honorable' Pact, Official Broadcasts Say

By International News Service.

Madrid, March 18.—With the rest of Europe engulfed in a new crisis, the early end of the 32-month-old Spanish civil war came into sight tonight when Julian Besteiro, foreign minister of the Madrid Defense Junta, announced over the radio that negotiations are being launched immediately for a surrender to Gen. Franco.

Asks 'Honorable' Peace

Besteiro, a veteran Socialist "right-wing" leader, announced that in seeking peace with Franco the only provision that will be asked by the Madrid national defense council will be that the peace shall be "honorable."

It was expected Franco would agree, or possibly already has agreed, to treat leniently the defense council's officials, including Besteiro, Col. Segismundo Casado and Gen. Jose Miaja.

Youth, 19, Admits Killing 2 Women And Attacking 50

Chicago, March 18 (AP).—Police said Sam Hryciuk, 19, today confessed killing two Chicago women within the last 18 months and admitted about 50 attacks, or attempted attacks on other women.

Hryciuk first admitted he attacked, strangled and robbed Mrs. Bertha de Meyer, 67, in her home last November 11, Sergt. Riley said.

Then he confessed that on October 9, 1937, he accosted Mrs. Caroline Schenke in an alley, struck her on the head with a milk bottle, attacked her and left her dead.

Hryciuk was arrested Tuesday after an attack on a woman.

Benes Reported Planning 'Rump' Regime in U. S.

Los Angeles, March 18 (INS).—Jan Masaryk, former Czecho-Slovak envoy to Great Britain, intimated today that Eduard Benes, who resigned the Czech presidency after seizure of Sudetenland by the Germans, shortly would proclaim a provisional government in the United States.

(Dr. Benes at the University of Chicago, where he is lecturing on "Democracy," declined to be interviewed on the report.)

Dr. Felix B. Janovsky, Czecho-Slovak consul in Los Angeles, corroborated the understanding that Czech leaders in this country are planning a "rump" government.

Hungary Thanks Duce for Aid in Taking Ruthenia

Budapest, March 18 (I.N.S.).—Premier Paul Teleki telegraphed tonight to Premier Mussolini, thanking the Italian dictator for helping Hungary acquire Ruthenia. A similar message was sent by Foreign Minister Count Stephen Csaky to Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano.

Hungarian casualties in the Ruthenian campaign were officially announced as 37 killed and 117 wounded.

Roosevelt Enjoys Brief Week-End Potomac Cruise

President Roosevelt and a small party of guests enjoyed a brief cruise in the Presidential yacht on the Potomac River yesterday to a point below Mount Vernon.

Guests included the President's uncle, Frederic Delano; Mr. and Mrs. Little Hambley, of Dutchess County, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Ben King, of Washington, and Elizabeth Henderson, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a friend and protege of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Individuals and Nations Must Pay Debts, Garner Writes Cleric

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 18.—The New York Times says Vice President Garner wrote a Texas clergyman yesterday that he believed "an obligation assumed is to be met," whether owed by an individual, organization or nation.

The Vice President, the Times said, had modified a 6-year-old rule against expressing himself on public questions to give his views to the Rev. Paul B. Martin, pastor of a Wichita Falls (Tex.) church.

"If we look to good faith in the individual, then to an equal or greater extent should we be able to expect good faith and honor in a group of those individuals," he said.

"As the aggregate of character of the citizens of a nation determines the national character of that nation, so does the collective character of the individuals composing a group determinine the character of that group."

Garner has maintained privately, the Times adds, that the Federal Government's debt "will never be paid if recurring deficits are allowed to build it higher and higher."

Girl, 18, Accused Of Killing Youth

Milford, Del., March 18 (AP).—Isabelle Donovan, 18, was held without bail today on a murder charge in the fatal shooting three days ago of Vaughn George Webb, 19-year-old CCC enrollee.

The young woman fainted last night when a coroner's jury held her responsible for the youth's death. He was found shot through the heart in an automobile parked on a Milford street.

Hurban Still Holds Czech Legation

Hitler's conquest of Czecho-Slovakia remained incomplete yesterday, as Col. Vladimir Hurban, Czecho-Slovak Minister to the United States, continued to hold the legation at Twenty-fourth street and Massachusetts avenue.

The Nazi diplomats farther east on Massachusetts avenue are remaining silent. It was suggested that the controversy may go to the Supreme Court.

Cocos Isle, Once Pirate Lair, Sought as Canal Defense Link

Copyright, 1939, by International News Service.

Moving to afford better defense of the Panama Canal from a Pacific Ocean air or naval attack, House naval experts yesterday proposed that the United States buy Cocos Island, 600 miles off Panama City, from Costa Rica.

Legislation authorizing President Roosevelt to enter negotiations with the Costa Rican Republic to acquire the island for a naval air station was introduced by Rep. Izak (Democrat) of California, former naval officer and holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Izak acted after reports were received that land for a flying field had been obtained by the Japanese in Costa Rica, on the pretext of raising cotton.

Cocos Island is 300 miles west of the Costa Rican Coast. Reputedly it was once a pirate haven.

The State Department revealed yesterday that for 40 years naval and military experts had recommended that the United States acquire the island. Experts said that should the island fall into the hands

AMERICAN PARADISE?

HAWAIIAN CAVIAR: You can phone a big shot on the sands of Waikiki Beach from Washington or New York as easily as you can phone between those two cities . . . There's an outdoor phone on the edge of the sands . . . The joke is on Paradise-hunters who thought they'd lower their taxes by moving to these American isles of enchantment. But territorial tax collectors are no more slouches than those anywhere else in the United States.

Gloria Topping . . . protected

When young multi-millionaire Bob Topping dances at the beach with his heiress-bride, Gloria Baker, he has the same ultra-protective attitude of any $40-a-week honeymooner . . . The menace of the tax collector can draw young newlyweds together, too.

* * * *

At last that graceful necklace of flowers, the lei, is about to be introduced to New York . . . A handsome young feminine florist from Madison avenue has been learning how to make them and is heading home next week with the precious knowledge. So you'll be seeing 'em before long at the Stork and 21 Club.

"—leis soon on Broadway"

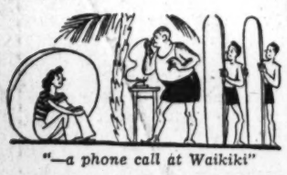
One difficulty will be that a lei that cost 25 or 50 cents here in Hawaii will probably cost $5 to $10 in New York. Flowers are incredibly plentiful and cheap here, even in what they call "winter." You can buy leis at two for a quarter, and the pictures convey very little of their beauty.

* * * *

Two of the most ecstatic—and expensive—sports in the world are surfboarding and outrigger canoe riding. About an hour's whirl on the turquoise waves of Waikiki with the dusky beach boys will cost a curious and adventurous couple around five dollars. But it's worth it, because you can't get the feel of the South Seas without it.

* * * *

Those beach boys with the gleaming eyes and teeth handle a mililiini wahine, as a mainland girl is called, as impersonally on a surfboard as if she were a sack of flour or a window dummy. They must help her onto the long heavy streamlined board, aid her to kneel or stand up, keep her from falling off too clumsily, lie behind her as they paddle in. The wahines might as well be grandmothers.



"—a phone call at Waikiki"

Underneath the greenish-blue water lies the coral sand of which Waikiki is built, and a careless fall from a surfboard may bring a bruise. One girl slipped off rather dangerously the other day and her beach boy dived underneath her so she would land on him instead of on the hard coral.

* * * *

They still remember Vice President Garner in this mid-Pacific American territory for his home-spun pronunciation of Hawaii—he called it "High-way-yah" . . . It should be pronounced "Hah-why-eee"; the song writer who made it rhyme with how-are-yuh got no applause for this feat around Honolulu.

* * * *

The islands are filled with mainlanders who came to stay two weeks and remained two months or two years or permanently . . . Yet I have just heard of a yachtload of husbands—haoles all, as the Caucasians are called—who have gone off to New Zealand, 4,000 miles away, for fishing and hunting. Some of them are enthusiastic sportsmen. Others are just husbands.

80 Billion U.S. Income Held Possible Again

U. S. Chamber Pleads With Business: 'Let's Go American'

By International News Service.

The United States again can attain an $80,000,000,000 national income annually, the United States Chamber of Commerce declared yesterday in an appeal to private business under a heading of "Let's Go America."

Getting private business enterprise under full headway will be the objective of the twenty-seventh meeting here of the chamber, May 1 to 4, the organization announced, adding:

"In many respects it is the most important business meeting of its kind to be held in many years—not only because it affords opportunity for arriving at a business consensus on problems of national concern at the moment, but also because every industry and every individual business enterprise has a direct and vital interest in their solution.

"The American system of free enterprise must be made to work—fully and completely. It is the key—the only key—to the expansion of production, the increase of employment, the maintenance of social security, the wider distribution of goods, the improvement and advancement of the American standard of living."

The chamber asked why had the national income dropped from $80,000,000,000 to $60,000,000,000 a year and demanded "what part has governmental policy played in causing this halting of private business enterprise—by repressive taxation, by indefinite and restrictive regulation, by direct competition?"

Upward Gains Continue

The Nation's business in the past week continued its gradual climb upward, with wholesalers registering "satisfactory" gains over last year, due partly to the approaching Easter buying season, the Department of Commerce reported yesterday.

Retail trade as a whole, particularly in new car sales, maintained its gains over the same period last year. Reports from New York indicated that business there added a few notches to its seasonal improvement.

Scattered signs of improved employment conditions were reported, with moderate increases noted chiefly in seasonal ocupations.

House Building Increases

More dollars were poured into home construction last year than in any year since 1930, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins reported yesterday.

In a survey of building permits issued in 1,790 cities, the Labor Department found permit valuations for new residences gained 14 per cent between 1937 and 1938.

Reported value of all permits for 1938 was $1,753,000,000. Of this sum 50 per cent went into new residences, 32 per cent into new non-residential construction, and 18 per cent for alterations, repairs and additions to standing constructions.

Expenditures for apartment house construction gained 50 per cent over the preceding year, Secretary Perkins stated.

Housing Unit Limit Opposed By Federation

The American Federation of Housing Authorities yesterday entered the fight to force the House of Representatives to reverse its recent move to fix the maximum dwelling unit cost of projects financed by the United States Housing Authority at $3,500.

The cut was tentatively agreed upon by the House in an amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill which will be subject to a record vote before the measure is passed.

James Utich, executive director to the federation, said, "This $3,500 figure would eliminate practically all the projects now under construction and make it impossible to undertake any low-rent housing and slum-clearance program throughout the country."

U.S. Bureau Claims 33 Per Cent Gain in Getting Idle Jobs

A gain of one-third in the number of jobs filled above the level of a year ago was reported by offices of the United States Employment Service in February, Miss Perkins, Secretary of Labor, reported yesterday.

"This is the fourth consecutive month in which placements have been above the level of one year earlier," she said. Improvement was reported in 36 States. Declines in numbers of jobseekers registering were reported. A total of 181,054 complete placements of all types were made in the month. Those in private jobs numbered 126,408.

the New York peace meetings. They said the new charges created an "irritating influence" upon eventual outcome of the entire peace effort.

In a formal statement, carried in its weekly bulletin, the AFL revealed its negotiating committee had rejected, in New York, the CIO proposal for amalgamation of both movements and the four big independent railroad brotherhoods, in an American Congress of Labor, a movement which would unite 10,000,000 American workers.

Frey Issues Statement

The outright charge of communist influence within CIO ranks was carried in a companion statement, issued through the Federation by John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the AFL, regarded as one of its leading "conservatives."

Frey cited passages in the CIO merger plan and portions of a Communist Party resolution, printed in the New York Daily Worker two years ago, to show what he termed a "deadly parallel" between the two.

Having first dismissed it as "irrational," and then agreed to consider it, the A. F. of L. in last night's denunciation, said of the John L. Lewis committee plan for ending American labor's three-year civil war:

"It is not new . . . it bears all the earmarks of the type of 'united front,' which does not unite but divides. It would transfer direction of the trade union movement from its own hands largely into those of Government workers, a dangerous tendency which has found extreme expression in totalitarian states.

New Outbreak Feared

"Proposal to dissolve the A. F. L. and the C. I. O. and to replace them with a nebulous new federation would only make confusion worse confounded and increase obstacles to a labor peace. Under the cloak of peace, the proposal carried within it the germs of new dissensions, divisions and conflicts."

Its own "since peace formula," the federation expounded in six points, as providing:

The unions which originally left the A. F. of L. to form the C. I. O. would not apply for readmission, or be readmitted, until all matters affecting the newly organized C. I. O. unions are adjusted.

A joint equally representative conference committee to work out mutually acceptable settlements of each jurisdictional conflict.

Conflicts adjusted, membership of new C. I. O. unions would be admitted into the A. F. of L. at the same time as the original unions that seceded.

A. F. of L. would consider amending its constitution, granting its executive council power to suspend an affiliated union or revoke its charter only on direct authority of an A. F. of L. convention.

A special convention within 60 to 90 days, at which all organizations would be entitled to representation.

The A. F. of L. would agree to specify certain industries where the industrial form of organization would apply.

This proposed armistice is now under consideration of the general peace conference, the A. F. of L. revealed.

On Capitol Hill

Thomas Names Senate Labor Sub-Committee To Hold Hearings on Walsh-Healey Act Change

By International News Service.

A sub-committee to hold hearings on proposed amendments to the Walsh-Healey act has been named, Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, Senate Labor Committee chairman, announced yesterday. Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, sponsor of the original act, now an advocate of the amendments, was named chairman.

SEN. WALSH

The amendments would provide that Government contractors holding contracts not lower than $2,000 would be brought under the fair labor standards of the act. Serving with Walsh in the hearings will be Senators Pepper, of Florida, and Hill, of Alabama, Democrats; La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Efforts to energize business gained momentum at the Capitol. A group of Congress members who had introduced separate bills directed at liberalizing credits for small and new business were reported to have agreed on consolidation of their proposals.

Chairman William O. Douglas of the Securities Commission, a member of the Monopoly Investigating Committee, recently told the Congress members that if they would unify their various proposals a full public hearing could be given the matter.

Senators Logan (Democrat), Kentucky; Pepper (Democrat), Florida, and Mead (Democrat), New York, and Representative Allen (Democrat), Pennsylvania, were reported to have agreed to the suggestion.

Democratic Senators reported yesterday that President Roosevelt had agreed to a "team-work" proposal by Administration supporters in the Senate.

Under it the Chief Executive is supposed, they said, to apprise Senators of his party of legislative proposals he has in mind, and to give them an opportunity of making protests or suggestions before action is taken.

This Democratic peace proposal was agreed to, it was said, when four first-term Senators visited the White House last week-end. The four were Schwartz (Democrat), Wyoming; Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana; Lee (Democrat), Oklahoma, and Mead (Democrat), New York.

They declined to be quoted, but others said the quartet spoke for 16 Democrats, friends of the Administration, who had urged closer co-operation between the White House and Capitol Hill.

Senator Schwartz (Democrat), Wyoming, predicted yesterday that demands for revision of Federal taxes on corporations would disappear "just as soon as business sees the figures."

The Wyoming Senator, an Administration supporter, expressed the opinion that the single corporation income tax which would be necessary to maintain Government revenue, in event other levies were repealed, would have to be so high business would prefer existing taxes.

"There will be a bigger howl from both big and little business against necessary increases than now exists for revision," Schwartz said.

U. S. Envoys Fly To See Columbus Disinterred

An official party of 16 representing the United States Government flew yesterday to Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic, by Pan American clipper to see the casket of Christopher Columbus disinterred.

After ceremonies in the cathedral there they will inspect the site of a proposed memorial to the explorer to be erected by 21 Pan American nations. It is to be constructed and dedicated in 1942.

In the party were Senator Green (Democrat), Rhode Island, of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Representative Fish (Republican), New York, of the corresponding House committee.

U. S. Building Designs Subject of Contest

Secretary Morgenthau yesterday announced a series of regional competitions for designs for Federal buildings.

The projects in the competition are four postoffice buildings for Evansville, Ind., Charleston, S. C., Leavenworth, Kans., and Burlingame, Calif.

Taft Calls Overture To Business Admission of Fault

New York, March 18 (AP).—The Administration's recent overtures to industry were characterized by Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, today, as insincere and an admission that business has been "badgered and discouraged."

The Ohio senator told the National Republican Club that the Republican party must assume leadership in giving encouragement to business.

Rep. Allen's Bill Would Modify Guffey Coal Act

Representative Allen (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, completed work yesterday on a legislative prescription for remodeling the Government's coal regulation machinery.

A bill he intends to introduce tomorrow would eliminate compulsory price-fixing, basic feature of the Guffey coal act, and would set up a three-man commission instead of the seven-man body provided in the present act.

Pact With Miners Expected Soon

New York, March 18 (U.P.).—Leading Appalachian bituminous coal producers predicted privately tonight that collective bargaining conferences with the United Mine Workers Union would result in extension of their present agreement covering 338,000 miners for one or two more years.

U. M. W. officials are demanding a 50-cent per day wage increase and the operators ask a pay cut of the same amount. Both groups were hopeful of a final agreement next week.

Bill Sought to Pay Rejected Judge

Representative Flannagan, (Democrat—Virginia) said yesterday he would sponsor a bill to pay Judge Floyd H. Roberts, of Bristol, for his time served on the Western Virginia District Court bench until his rejection by the Senate last month.

Although Roberts served under a recess appointment from shortly after adjournment of Congress last year until his rejection by the Senate in February, he could not, under the law, draw any compensation for his services until confirmed by the Senate.

Bushfield Sees 1940 G.O.P. Victory

The Republican Party is on the march, to "save the American form of government, and preserve liberty for all future Americans," and will restore itself to power in 1940, Gov. Harlan J. Bushfield of South Dakota, declared in a radio address last night.

"We were led astray in 1932 by the seductive strains of a pied piper promising a Utopia," he said. "But we returned safely in 1936, and came back all the way in 1938."

Lovejoy, Eastman Head, Gets $115,419 Salary

Indicative of a boom in the camera business, Frank W. Lovejoy, president of the Eastman Kodak Co., received salary and other remuneration of $115,419 in 1938, the Securities and Exchange Commission revealed yesterday. Three vice-presidents of the same concern received more than $60,000 each.

Murphy's Brother Will Attend Fitzgerald Rites

Attorney General Murphy said yesterday he would be unable to attend the funeral of Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald, of Michigan, who died Thursday night. He designated his brother, George Murphy, judge of the Recorders Court at Detroit, to attend the funeral as his representative.

WPA Orders Cut Of 400,000 Unless It Gets New Funds

Works Progress Administration officials last night drafted a plan to cut 400,000 persons from WPA rolls April 1 while the Administration battled economy advocates in Congress for $150,000,000 to continue relief at its present level until July 1.

WPA administrator F. C. Harrington will issue orders based on the plan tomorrow, to be ready in event Congress does not provide the additional funds. Approved by President Roosevelt, the plan calls for the April 1 cut to be followed by a 600,000 reduction early in May and 200,000 in June.

Relief rolls stand at 3,015,000 persons. If the additional $150,000,000 is approved orders for reductions will not be made effective.

Survey Urges Child Welfare Reorganization

Kepecs Reports Need For Complete Change; Submits 4-Point Plan

Sweeping reforms of local child welfare agencies, described as "below accepted minimum standards and lagging behind other communities," were recommended by the Commissioners' Child Welfare Review Advisory Committee in a report made public yesterday.

The report, based on a survey conducted by Dr. Jacob Kepecs, Chicago child welfare expert, was the second sponsored by the committee.

A four-point program calling for creation of a Child Welfare Division to operate on an appropriation of $636,000 and co-ordinate all child welfare agencies was recommended by Dr. Kepecs.

Needs Reorganization

The Chicago welfare expert charged District authorities with "indifference" in treating the child care program here, stating the city has failed to keep pace with changes and developments.

"The entire program needs reorganization in order to bring it into line with present-day needs," Dr. Kepecs stated.

His recommendations follow:

Unification of the child care services into one division.

Creation of a unit for protective and special services to handle preventive case work services, intake service, inquiries, investigation for adoption, commitments to the District Training School for the Feebleminded, unmarried mothers, housekeeper service and investigations and services in relation to licensing.

Organization of a child placing unit for the care of children in foster family homes.

Unit of case work services to children in institutions. Under this recommendation Dr. Kepecs suggests a new receiving home, a comprehensive medical and dental service, a psychiatric and psychological service under the Health Department and a change in the practice of commitments by the Juvenile Court.

The units making up the Child Welfare Division would include the present Child Welfare Division, the Receiving Home, the National Training School for Girls, the Industrial Home School for White Children, the Industrial Home School for Colored Children and District wards in the National Training School for Boys.

Provision is made for a general superintendent with annual pay of $6,500, to co-ordinate present facilities, eliminate overlapping and cultivate harmony with other agencies, "notably the Juvenile Court."

Dr. Kepecs recommends that the court commit children to the Child Welfare division for an indefinite period, excepting in cases where a "during minority" commitment is clearly indicated.

He maintains this would save children on temporary commitment the necessity of repeated court appearance and ease the task of the "hard-pressed" social workers of the Child Welfare division.

One of the greatest needs in the child care program is additional foster homes, the report stated. It is estimated that there is a need for 150 to 200 new foster homes yearly as against the ability to find only about 40 each year.

Under the present budget ($367,500) children are not obtaining food, shelter, clothing and guidance, it is stated.

Throughout the report, Dr. Kepecs recommends additional case workers, social workers and office personnel

$25,000 Is Needed

Present medical services for children are inadequate, Dr Kepecs says, finding the division uses funds appropriated for maintenance of children to pay salaries of nurses and physicians, which, he states, "is undesirable."

He estimates it would cost $25,000 to improve this phase of the program. A similar setup is necessary in the psychiatric and psychological services, which would cost $50,000. Dr. Kepecs stated that Elwood Street, director of the Board of Public Welfare, has included this sum in the 1940 budget estimates.

The earlier report was conducted by Miss Dorothy Henry, of Cleveland, who also recommended a new receiving home and consoliration of the child welfare agencies under one head.

report, said:

Field of Two-Week-Old Controversy Narrowing, Steelman Says; Union Spokesman Calls Parley 'Encouraging'

Spokesmen for employes, employers and the Labor Department yesterday conferred continuously for eight hours without settling the Capital's two-week-old hotel strike.

"Considerable progress" resulted, however, it was reported by Dr. John R. Steelman, conciliation chief for the Labor Department. The arbitrator was seconded in his suggestion that the field of controversy between strikers and management of the hotels is narrowing by one union representative, who said:

"It's an encouraging sign that we were able to talk this thing over for eight hours without coming to any dispute serious enough to break up the negotiations," which will be resumed at 11 a. m. today.

Lecture Series Scheduled for Young Lawyers

A series of lectures by members of the District judiciary, designed to help young attorneys bridge the gap between law school and practice, will be opened next month by the junior bar conference of the American Bar Association and junior bar section of the District Bar Association.

Procedure in Washington courts and in Government administrative agencies will be emphasized in the lecture series.

Board Refuses Liquor Permit

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday denied a liquor license to George Walsh, 829 Upshur street northwest, because of protests from property owners.

Walsh requested permission to sell liquor at his restaurant. The board said 2,147 persons signed a petition urging refusal. Roosevelt High School and Macfarland Junior High School are nearby.

Saito's Ashes Put on Cruiser At Annapolis

Pickets Break Line At Hotel to Let Coffin Go Through

Bearing the ashes of Hirosi Saito, former Japanese Ambassador to the United States, the cruiser Astoria, sailed yesterday from the Naval Academy for the diplomat's native land.

The rare gesture of Japanese-American amity was ordered by President Roosevelt soon after Saito died three days ago.

Draped with the rising sun flag of his country, the ashes of the frail little diplomat, contained in a whitewood shrine—a replica of a 1,200-year-old Japanese temple—rested in state at the Japanese Embassy for an hour before being borne in a long funeral procession to Annapolis.

Pickets Break Line

Hotel strikers broke their picket line at the Shoreham Hotel to allow the coffin to pass down the driveway en route to the embassy. The only flowers at the bier in the embassy were in a green wreath sent by Mr. Roosevelt.

An Army detail from Fort Myer presented arms as the mourners left the embassy where the flag of the Rising Sun flew at halfmast. In the first limousine of the procession to Annapolis rode Mme. Saito, heavily veiled, and her two daughters, Sakiki, 12, and Maskao, 10.

Ambassador Kensuke Horinouchi, officials from the embassy and New York consular office as well as the State Department followed in a dozen automobiles.

Honored at Annapolis

The Naval Academy honored Saito in a ceremony without precedent in the history of the institution. High officials and details of bluejackets stood at attention while the ashes were carried aboard the cruiser.

Nakichi Kitazawa, second secretary of the Japanese Embassy, also boarded the Astoria for the voyage to Japan.

Mme. Saito, it was learned, declined the Government's invitation to sail on the Astoria because she wished her husband "to have the glory of returning alone." She will leave with her daughters for Japan late this month.

New Patent Laws Asked to Keep U. S. Inventively Ahead

New York, March 18 (AP).—The United States patent system may be revised soon "to keep this country inventively ahead of the economic and military systems of the totalitarian powers." This was disclosed today in announcement of the appointment of a national advisory council to assist Congress.

Richard Eyre, council chairman, said the council would recommend legislation for general revision of the patent law; elimination of monopolistic patent practices and the protection of patents and stimulation of American invension for military and industrial purposes; and for elimination of delays, red tape and litigation in patenting.

Weatherman Promises to Banish King Winter For Cherry Blossom Festival Opening Friday

Despite the fact that Old Man Winter reasserted himself yesterday, District Commissioners yesterday announced that March 24-31 has been formally set aside as Cherry Blossom Week.

Date for the celebration has been fixed two weeks earlier than usual because the buds are just about ready to blossom.

Snow flurries fell on the city yesterday and the mercury plunged to sub-freezing temperatures. Although the opening festivities set for Friday will be held whether the weather is warm or cold, District officials look forward to a normal spring day, with their optimism finding support in today's prediction for a rising mercury after a low of 24 early this morning. Clear skies were also due today.

The Commissioners pointed out that despite removal of 18 cherry trees to make way for the Jefferson Memorial, there are more Japanese trees than ever this year.

Thousands of visitors are expected for the celebration Friday, which will open at 7 a. m. at the Tidal Basin with a program by the Marine Band and Playground Department.

Peggy Townsend, attractive night club singer, will be crowned queen at ceremonies in Potomac Park polo field at 4:30 p. m.

Mounted troops from Fort Myer will stage an exhibition, events including a musical chair competition, rescue race, hunt team contest, musical drill, and retreat. Prizes will be awarded by Miss Townsend. A two-hour fireworks display will be held at night.

Recital Tickets Sold Despite Anderson Ban

Howard School Plans New Fight for Colored Singer

Denying any responsibility for making the Central High School auditorium "unavailable" for the Marian Anderson concert of April 9, as placed upon it Friday by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, the Howard University School of Music yesterday opened its subscription books for the concert.

The Marian Anderson Citizens' committee, which met directly upon Dr. Ballou's refusal to issue a permit for use of the auditorium, advised the concert management that it would hold a mass meeting on March 26 to devise further procedure to secure use of the high school auditorium.

This procedure, Dr. Charles H. Houston, former member of the Board of Education, stated, would consist of an appeal by the school of music from Dr. Ballou's action, to be made at the April 5 meeting of the Board of Education, and a request for a Congressional investigation of previous practices of the Board of Education and school officials in granting community use of buildings.

John Lovell, Howard University professor, who is secretary of the committee, in a statement said:

"It was the Board of Education which twisted a simple emergency request for use of a public building into an attempt to involve the local dual school system. The dual school system is not the issue. The issue is the community use of a public building on a holiday."

Hitler to Take Memel Next, Berlin Belief

Observers Predict Fuehrer Will Move Into Lithuania

By Louis P. Lochner.
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, March 18.—What is the next thing up Hitler's sleeve?

This is a question which thinking Berliners in every walk of life asked themselves today as the Nazi capital organized a conquering hero's welcome for the returning Fuehrer.

That the wiping out of Czecho-Slovakia as a state was not the end of territorial rearrangements in Europe was taken for granted by everybody here—both foreigner and German.

Few Know Hitler's Plans

The group of men surrounding Hitler who are told of his plans in advance is exceedingly small. Sometimes it includes only Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and Dr. Otto Dietrich, the Fuehrer's press chief, whose star seems to be rising.

They are sworn to secrecy and they keep dependably tight-lipped.

Nevertheless, events have a way of casting their shadows before them, though, as the Nazi technique becomes perfected, these shadows grow shorter.

The September crisis crept along for a month. Dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia was clearly discernible to those on the inside for only about a week before it happened.

Two Clews for Forecasts

Two cardinal principles of Hitler's foreign policy furnish clews to the direction from which forecasting shadows are likely to fall.

The first of these is that all Germans stand under the protection of Hitler, who regards it as his divine mission to bring "home into the Reich" all whom it is physically possible to rejoin to Greater Germany, and to enable those who must remain outside to practice the Nazi weltamschoung, or "world outlook."

The second key tenet of Nazlism is that Hitler is determined to guarantee lebensraum—"space for existing"—to a constantly increasing and expanding German nation.

When he annexed Austria the press with one accord began to name him the "Leader of All Germans."

With his assumption of a protectorate over Bohemia and Moravia the title of medieval German emperors was applied to Hitler by leading German publicists—"Augmentor of The Reich."

The Saar Valley, Austria and the Sudetenland were "brought home to the Reich" by Hitler.

Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia widened German space for existence with their industry, forests, minerals and agricultural products.

Altogether 80,000,000 Germans are now "Home in The Reich." Some 30,000,000, however, still remain outside.

Who Can "Come Home?"

In answering the question "What Next?" it is justifiable to consider who of those 30,000,000 can physically "Come Home into The Reich."

(Those who could "come home" through German territorial expansion would not include German-speaking and German-born residents of the Western Hemisphere and areas not seen as expansion targets. In the United States, for example, there are nearly 2,000,000 German and Austrian-born residents.)

Memel, with its 100,000 Germans, comes to mind first. Nobody here doubts but that it will be annexed by Germany sooner or later. Dr. Ernst Neumann, leader of the Memelland Germans, has indicated by his speeches in recent days that he thinks the hour of Memel's return to Germany is not far distant.

(Memel, a territory of 1,099 square miles, was detached from Germany by the Treaty of Versailles and handed over to Lithuania in 1923.)

Poles Watching Danzig

Danzig, with its 400,000 inhabitants and 754 square miles, comes to mind next.

The Danzigers, themselves, do not seem to think the hour has struck just yet. Polish Government circles, however, are keeping an anxious eye on this Baltic port, which they now control.

(Danzig, also German before the World War, was made a free city by the Versailles Treaty and placed within the Polish customs administration to give Poland an outlet to the Baltic.)

Bender Urges U. S. Halt All Trade With Reich

Cleveland, March 18 (AP).—Representative Bender (Republican), of Ohio, announced tonight he will propose in the House of Representatives that the United States "act at once to end all relations with Germany, economic and political."

"The German government understands only one language, the language of force," the Cleveland Congressman-at-large, said. "Short of war, there is only one weapon . . . trade."

Bender said he would propose that the United States keep its ambassador at home, recall its entire German Legation, stop all imports from and exports to Germany.

Britain Polls Empire on War Against Nazis; Cabinet Hears Rumania May Be Invaded

British

London-Paris alliance decides the time has come to put its new "stop Hitler" policy into effect.

The high commissioners for Eire and the various dominions were invited to the foreign office and there requested to get a definite answer from their capitals as to whether Rumania could be considered a vital interest of British Empire, worth fighting for.

For the second day in succession the American ambassador, Joseph P. Kennedy, saw Lord Halifax and received the latest information for transmission to Washington. Ambassador Kennedy, who predicted there would be no war in 1938, is making no prediction at all about 1939. Like Chamberlain, he is remaining in town over the week-end.

The French, Russian and German ambassadors paid separate calls on Lord Halifax, while the Italian ambassdor unexpectedly set forth for Rome to consult Premier Benito Mussolini, who is pictured here as wishing Hitler well, but not too well in his dangerous adventure.

Eden Called to Confer

Lord Halifax also had a chat with his predecessor as foreign secretary, Anthony Eden, who would like to broaden the cabinet base with himself and Winston Churchill and Alfred Duff Cooper, replacing some of the Munich defeatists.

As usual in time of crisis, Downing street was crowded with spectators who shivered in the cold March wind that whistled around what is known as "pneumonia corner."

To make the crisis atmosphere complete, the Archbishop of Canterbury, hero of the abdication crisis, showed up at the Foreign Office to bestow his blessing upon Lord Halifax.

Lord Halifax's desire for a Saturday Cabinet session, a rare event in this week-ending country, was inspired by a secret visit to him late last night by the Rumanian Minister in London, Vionel Virgil Tilea, who reported Germany had served an "economic ultimatum" upon Rumania, and that King Carol had rejected the ultimatum and was preparing to resist a German invasion, provided he could expect more than sympathy and passive support from Britain, France, Russia and Poland.

Ultimatum's Points

Berlin's ultimatum was said to have been delivered orally to Bucharest by Herr Wohlthat, representing Field Marshall Hermann Wilhelm Goering's economic organization, which is endeavoring to make the Reich self-sufficient for war. The principal points of the ultimatum were:

Germany must be granted an absolute monopoly of all Rumanian exportable products, especially the produce of her rich oil wells and grain fields.

Rumania must halt her industrial expansion; dismantle existing industries gradually, and revert to her old position of a purely agrarian country.

In return, Germany would guarantee the integrity of the present Rumanian frontiers.

Aside from the doubtful value of any such guarantee in the light of what happened to the Czech frontiers, Rumania rejected the ultimatum as a device to destroy her independence and turn her into a mere grocery and petrol pump for the Nazi war machine.

Military Heads Consulted

To enlist the co-operation of Britain's armed forces, the Rumanian minister also looked up the war secretary, Leslie Hore-Belisha and the first lord of the admiralty, Earl Stanhope.

Prior to today's cabinet meeting, the imperial defense committee, comprising experts of the army, navy and air force, met to consider the strategy of a Nazi putsch against Rumania.

The German forces invading Czecho-Slovakia and penetrating closer to Rumania each day number 22 divisions, including 10 mechanized divisions. In addition, another 22 divisions are being mobilized in Germany with a view to launching a formidable force of 44 divisions against Rumania.

The British Minister in Bucharest, Sir Reginald Hoare, saw the Rumanian Foreign Minister, who said there was no truth in the ultimatum story and the trade talks with Dr. Wohlthat were proceeding amiably and were strictly confined to economics.

On the other hand, Rumanian and Anglo-French circles here think the story is substantially true, all the more so since Hitler and Goering are known to be itching to lay hands on the Rumanian oil wells. There is no known reason why the Rumanian Minister should have rushed to the foreign office, causing an emergency cabinet meeting and throwing all Europe into jitters, unless he believed his country was under threat of invasion.

Halifax for Stand

The foreign office is making further inquiries as to the truth of this very curious matter.

Lord Halifax is leader of a wing in the cabinet which advocates a strong stand against Nazi aggression. As one observer expressed it: "His lordship is a real tough guy at the moment." Halifax thinks the Germans should be told precisely, and in writing, that, if they make a move against Rumania, it means a general war.

The French, likewise, want a bold stand. They are saying to Downing street: "Americans are going to be terribly shy of us if we submit once more to Hitler. Now is the time to make our positions so clear to Germany that she can't quibble about it."

Despite his latest speech, experienced observers think Chamberlain is still in a "governessy" state of mind toward Hitler, wagging a reproving finger at him, but unwilling to shake a fist.

One school led by Sir John Simon is said to argue that Rumania is not a "vital interest" for which British blood should be shed and that it is useless to attempt to halt Hitler short of the Near East. Their line of resistance would run from Turkey to Syria, to Palestine, to Egypt.

Opposed to this is the Halifax school of action, which would draw the deadline from Poland to Rumania and from Greece to Turkey.

Somewhere between these two deadlines wavers and wobbles the prime minister.

U. S. Envoy Called In

That America is being sounded out as a potential ally against Germany is disclosed by the well informed diplomatic correspondent of "The Sunday Times" who reports that in Lord Halifax's interview with American, French and Russian Ambassadors he touched on the idea that these "four peace-loving major powers should consult together, with the view to adopting a common policy in the face of the possibility of further German aggression."

This he adds, is one of the "chief points on which Lord Halifax reported to his cabinet colleagues in the afternoon. It is the major question of foreign policy and one on which a cabinet decision is needed."

Nazi Aides Here Surprised at U. S. Tariff Boost

By the Associated Press.

German Embassy officials, commenting on the United States customs action, last night said the existing system of trade between Germany and the United States was approved by the Treasury more than two years ago and had functioned since then without change of price or procedure on the German side.

They added that then officials agreed that 33 1-3 per cent over the world market prices for cotton was a fair and open market price in Germany, and said that since that time other negotiations had been conducted looking toward expansion of the system.

"In the German view," he added, "the inference left by this was that the system had been fully acceptable to the United States until today's unexpected announcement."

Berlin Rejects Demands for Consultation

Hitler

invasion of Czecho-Slovakia, it was said the envoy probably would be asked to report on an incident involving mention of Hitler in the House of Commons Thursday.

(This incident was the description of Hitler by Alfred Duff Cooper, former first lord of the admiralty, as a "thrice-perjured traitor and breaker of oaths." German circles in London resented the fact the speaker of the house made no objection to the remark. They expected the Nazi government to protest against it.)

Von Neurath Over Czechs

While all Europe anxiously watches the lengthening shadow of the swastika, Adolf Hitler rode from Vienna amid tumultuous "heils" to a secret stopping place on his way to Berlin. He left to lieutenants the task of imposing the Nazi will on Bohemia-Moravia and ironing out relations with Slovakia, Germany's new protectorates.

The Fuehrer was expected to make a triumphal entry into Berlin at 7:30 p. m. (1:30 p. m., E. S. T.) Sunday.

He named Baron Konstantin von Neurath, former German foreign minister and president of the secret cabinet council, as Reichsprotector of Bohemia-Moravia. Von Neurath, responsible only to the Fuehrer, will have supreme power over 7,000,000 Czechs who have become German subjects.

A German spokesman denied there had been any ultimatum to Rumania.

Of British and French charges that Munich accord of last September 29 had been disregarded in German occupation of Bohemia-Moravia, a foreign office spokesman declared, "We can only say that it was done legally."

This, in summary, was the Nazi stand expressed by informed German quarters in answer to the condemnation:

That Prague had violated the spirit of Munich, that the manner of incorporating the protectorates was within Hitler's policy of Pan-Germanism, that Germany never had renounced her right to a dominating control in central Europe, and that there was no more cause for Hitler to consult Chamberlain in advance than there would be for British statesmen to consult Hitler on matters within their own sphere of interest.

The basis for justifying the inclusion of Bohemia-Moravia within the borders of Germany was that it re-established 1,000-year-old ties.

Cheaper Cotton Abroad Opposed

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, announced yesterday he would ask the Senate to go on record in opposition to selling American cotton to foreign buyers below cost to the Government.

The Georgia Senator said he would introduce tomorrow a resolution declaring the Senate's sentiment to be against foreign sales at reduced prices, as is said to be understood in an export subsidy plan by Agriculture Secretary Wallace.

Nazis Order 'Questioning' of 10,000 Czechs

Democratic Protests Kept Out of Papers; People Honor War Dead

By the Associated Press.

Prague, March 18.—At least 10,000 residents of Bohemia and Moravia were known tonight to have been ordered to report for questioning by the new German masters of Czecho-Slovakia. Numerous arrests are known to have been made. The partitioned republic was kept ignorant of the fact that the United States, Britain and France had denounced Germany's absorption of Czecho-Slovakia. Only those few Czechs who heard foreign news broadcasts had any inkling the outside world was showing any interest in their fate.

Tears for Heroes of 1620

Newspapers were filled instead with announcement of the appointment of Baron Konstantin von Neurath as Reichs-protector over Bohemia and Moravia and that Karl Hermann Frank, assistant leader of the Sudeten struggle last year, would become his secretary of state.

All day Prague residents continued their silent demonstrations before the Rathaus war memorial honoring patriots who were killed in 1620, when Czechs once before lost their independence.

Men, women and children—few without tears—stood with bared heads before the memorial flanked by two eternal flames.

Inside the Rathaus (city hall), citizens complied with a military order requiring them to surrender all armaments. Revolvers, old muskets and antique weapons of all sorts were turned over to authorities who gave receipts in return.

Synagogue Burned

Reports from Prague suburbs said at least 200 women and children had spent last night hiding in the woods.

Foreigners today were forbidden to enter the Y. M. C. A., which had been headquarters for relief work among political refugees before the German conquest.

The Nazi campaign against Jews continued. A Jewish synagogue in Bruenn was destroyed today by fire.

"No Jews wanted" signs appeared in coffee houses of Maehrisch-Ostrau (Moravska-Ostrava). Other signs appeared designating the owners as German, Czech or Jewish.

ate, already have voted to approve the stringent decree powers.

With Senate adoption tomorrow a virtual certainty, it appeared by Monday Daladier would be in a position to wield more power than any postwar premier of France.

By the terms of the bill he could dissolve political parties, ban public meetings and newspapers, prolong Parliament's life or dissolve it, or virtually put France in a state of mobilization without obtaining parliamentary approval.

Daladier refused flatly to give the Chamber any definite information on what he proposed to do with the decree powers. He said they were military measures and could not be debated openly.

Through his ministers and through statements he made to deputies of the Finance Committee, however, this much of his program seemed certain:

Reinforcement of France's armed forces by calling the specialists to the colors for the army, navy and air forces.

Speeding up production in arms and other war industries by treasury loans and by increasing working hours.

Buying war stocks abroad to meet gaps in French production of supplies of war materials.

Increasing working hours beyond the 40-hour a week limit imposed by the People's Front government in industries other than those producing war materials.

In addition to these primary points, the deputies reported that to satisfy his Rightist majority, Daladier would prolong the life of the present parliament for two additional years until 1942 and institute a plan of electoral reform advocated by the right.

Besides the far-reaching action taken in the Chamber of Deputies, the day's swift developments included the dispatch of a denunciatory note to Berlin, in concert with Britain, which declared Germany had violated the Munich agreement by absorption of Czecho-Slovakia.

At the same time, Daladier called home Ambassador Robert Coulandre from Berlin, partly to get a personal confidential report on what the next Berlin-Rome axis move might be, partly to match Britain's action of yesterday in calling her Berlin envoy home.

He ordered Foreign Minister Bonnet and foreign office experts to inform Rumania, Soviet Russia, Yugoslavia and Poland of the French note to Berlin and of his new plan to move as fast as the dictators both at home and abroad.

of the Japanese, "it would be more dangerous to our Panama Canal life line than our fortification of Guam, 1,400 miles from Tokyo, would be to the Japanese."

Izac is a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, which will meet Wednesday to consider his bill.

Meanwhile, F. C. Harrington, WPA chief, declared many U. S. aviation advances in the last three and one-half years can be attributed directly to the Works Progress Administration.

To Recruit Pilots

In another defense development, the Army Air Corps announced it was beginning an intensive recruiting campaign intended to double the Army's output of military pilots.

Army officials estimated 1,000 cadets would be put through intensified flight training per year in their new schedule.

Five groups of officers were designated to visit universities and colleges to recruit June graduates. Other youths will be enrolled in the meantime if they can meet physical requirements and educational tests.

In putting the new program into operation, the Army's pilot training course will be reduced from 12 to 9 months. Fifteen civilian schools, already turning out commercial pilots, will be employed to give the first three months of primary training.

For Shorter Courses

At Randolph and Kelly Fields, Tex., basic and advanced courses will be shortened from four to three months each. Classes will be increased from three to four annually and doubled in size to 700 students.

Meantime, Dr. John W. Finch, director of the Bureau of Mines, warned in a radio address that America needs a two-year import supply of aluminum, antimony, chromium, manganese, nickel, mercury, tin and tungsten.

"The chaotic political and economic conditions existing in the world today," Finch said, "give added significance to the problem of mineral insufficiency and the needs of national defense."

Due to improved detection and firefighting methods, only 1,279 acres of the Federal park system's total of 19,000,000 acres were burned over last year, the Department of Interior revealed yesterday.

Although the actual number of fires (416) last year was above the ten-year average (350), the fires burned only an average of three acres before being brought under control by Park Service Rangers and CCC enrollees.

U. S. Penalizes Nazi Imports By Extra Duty

State

machinery.

However principal exports from Germany have been chemicals, toys, medicines, paper and china.

United States exports to Germany, in the same period, amountedto $107,588,000.

Penalty Duties

The extra duties imposed yesterday by the Treasury, with the knowledge of the State Department, will be in addition to those normally applying. Germany already has been at a disadvantage in the United States market through this country's "blacklist" of her products because of discriminatory restrictions against American trade. Germany has been denied concessions granted to other countries under the "most favored nation" clause of this country's reciprocal trade agreements. The new duties are effective April 23.

Yesterday's action followed by only 24 hours this Government's denunciation as "wanton lawlessness" Germany's "temporary extinguishment" of the Czecho-Slovakian republic, but officials declined expressly to say that the two steps were related. The Treasury order "speaks for itself," was the comment in that department.

However, it was clear that the tariff step, added to suspension of the reciprocal trade agreement concessions from the German-seized areas, announced Friday, comprised action which President Roosevelt may have had in mind when he told Congress "there are many methods, short of war but stronger and more effective than mere words, of bringing home to aggressor governments the aggregate sentiments of our people."

Ruthenia classified

The Treasury ruled, at the same time, that goods produced in Ruthenia (Carpatho-Ukraine) should be treated as Hungarian goods, in which classification they still would be entitled to the benefits of the Czecho-Slovak trade agreement, benefits which were open to Hungary before the recent change in sovereignty.

Sumner Welles, acting Secretary of State, who issued Friday's statement, made known his intention to reply early in the week to Berlin's notification of her action in Czecho-Slovakia, and it was confidently expected that the reply would be a most emphatic protest against the German steps.

At his press conference yesterday Welles said there was no basis for reports that the United States might join Great Britain, France and Russia in a four-power conference on means of stopping the spread of the dictator nations' power.

He indicated that a decision may be expected within a few days as to the status of Wilbur J. Carr, United States Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, who is remaining at his post at Prague despite Berlin's assumption of control over that country's foreign relations.

May Support Hurban

There were plain indications that the United States Government will support the stand of Vladimir Hurban, Czecho-Slovakian Minister here, who has steadfastly refused to give up the legation to officials of the Germany Embassy. He has even defied an order of the former Cezh foreign minister that he yield the property. It was the general expectation the dispute will reach the Supreme Court here, which has original jurisdiction in such cases.

Senator Pittman, announcing his new neutrality bill, denied it was "part of any 'Stop Hitler' move," but conceded it would serve to improve the position of Great Britain and France, which could carry away American munitions much more readily than could the totalitarian countries.

His measure would repeal all present neutrality legislation and substitute his own program. It would provide that:

"Within 30 days after the outbreak of declared or undeclared conflict between foreign states, the President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved," whereupon the cash-and-carry provisions shall become effective.

No American vessel would be permitted to carry passengers or freight "directly or indirectly" to any state named in the proclamation.

The act would not apply to civil war, such as that in Spain.

Pittman said he was prompted partly by the "injustice" under the present act of refusing to sell munitions to such countries as China, which do not have munitions plants; and by the "necessity" to expand the capacity of such plants in this country so they could care for United States' needs.

More Gold Flows In

"I think the elemination of the civil strife feature will prove to be popular," he said. "I have been receiving thousands of letters on this subject and it has gotten to be a matter of domestic strife in this country."

The foreign relations chairman said he had not consulted Administration officials in drafting the legislation. However, President Roosevelt Friday said events in Europe had demonstrated the need for revision of the neutrality act.

Europe's flow of gold to this country, seeking safety, meanwhile had increased the gold stock here to a record total of $15,005,239,730.

French Get Legation Keys

Paris, March 18 (AP).—Keys to the Czecho-Slovak Legation were handed over to the French Foreign Office today by Stephan Osusky, Minister from the vanished republic, who declined to surrender his legation to German diplomats.

It was considered possible the Foreign Office might retain the keys, since France has formally notified Germany she considers the absorption of Czecho-Slovakia illegal.

Democratic Cordon Forms

Paris, March 18.—France and Great Britain are contemplating a common proclamation of democratic solidarity against Pan-Germanism, possibly with participation of the United States as well as other European powers, it was learned on the highest authority tonight.

Extraordinary diplomatic activity was begun tonight in Paris and London to bring about a proclamation by France, Britain, Poland, Rumania, Holland, the Balkan entente, the Scandinavian countries, Russia and, if possible, the United States.

Text of Order Defining Customs Penalties To Be Imposed on Subsidized Nazi Imports

New Classifications To Include Goods From Czech Areas

Following are texts (1) of an order by the United States Customs Bureau, Treasury Department, imposing countervailing duties on imports of goods from Germany; (2) an opinion by the Attorney General upon which the order was based, and (3) an order by the Acting Commisioner of Customs placing all goods from Ruthenia on the same import basis as those from Hungary:

Notice of countervailing duties be imposed under section 303, Tariff Act of 1930, by reason of the payment or bestowal of a bounty or grant upon the exportation of certain goods from Germany. Collectors of customs instructed to suspend liquidation of entries covering dutiable imports from Germany and to collect estimated additional duties in certain cases.

Treasury Department,
Office of the Commissioner of Customs,
Washington, D. C.

To Collectors of Customs and Others Concerned:

The bureau is in receipt of information concerning the operation of so-called "barter" transactions through which the importation into the United States of merchandise from Germany is financed by means of premium prices for certain products, particularly cotton and copper, which satisfies the bureau that such transactions involve the payment or bestowal of bounties or grants within the meaning of section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C. title 19, sec. 1303).

Accordingly, notice is hereby given that dutiable merchandise imported directly or indirectly from Germany, which has been or shall be acquired by or through the disposal of other goods on a premium basis (regardless of the character of such other goods or of the method or means of such disposal), if entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption after the expiration of thirty days after the publication of this decision in a weekly issue of Treasury Decisions, will be subject to the payment of countervailing duties equal to the net amount of any bounty or grant determined or estimated to have been paid or bestowed upon its exportation from Germany.

Upon entry for consumption or withdrawal from warehouse for consumption, on or after the effective date of this notice, of dutiable merchandise imported directly or indirectly from Germany, there shall be collected in addition to any other duties estimated or determined to be due, estimated countervailing duties at the rate of 25 per cent. of the invoice value. The liquidation of entries covering such merchandise shall be suspended and the facts concerning the maner of payment for the goods shall be reported promptly and in full to the bureau.

JAMES H. MOYLE,
Commissioner of Customs.
Approved: March 18, 1939.
HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.
Secretary of the Treasury.

Partial text of the Attorney General with respect to the above Treasury decision, explaing how the the penalty tariff could be applied in specific cases, follows:

March 18, 1939.

The Honorable the Secretary of the Treasury:

My dear Mr. Secretary—Reference is made in your memoranhum to the President, dated November 28, 1938, in which you outline practices now prevailing in Germany, and to your recent informal request for my opinion as to whether those practices require the imposition by the Treasury Department of countervailing duties under section 303 of the tariff act of 1930. . . .

How System Operates

From a subsequent memorandum, dated January 20, 1939, it appears that the following example will serve to illustrate how the present German practices operate:

An American importer desires to import into the United States from Germany certain cameras. Before this can be done approval of the transaction must be obtained from the German exchange control authorities, without whose approval nothing can be exported from Germany.

This approval is obtained, and under arrangement approved by the German import control authorities, without whose approval nothing can be imported into Germany, a German agent acting for the American importer buys American cotton at the world price for $1,000 and sells it in Germany for 2,500 Reichsmarks (the world price at the prevailing rate of exchange of 40 cents), plus a premium of 33 1-3 per cent, making a total sales price of 3,333 Reichsmarks, the equivalent of $1,333.

This sales price has been fixed in advance by the German import control authorities, and the German purchaser of the cotton is required to pay it into a special account in a German bank in free German marks, which immediately become blocked and frozen and thereafter, for all practical purposes, are usable only by the American importer in the purchase of cameras which the German exchange control authorities have authorized to be exported from Germany.

The American importer thereupon buys cameras for $1,333 (3,333 Reichmarks) and imports them into the United States. Thus, for cameras which cost the American importer $1,000 the German exporter is paid $1,333; with the result that the German exporter is enabled to compete unfairly with, and probably to undersell, American camera manufacturers, while the exportation to Germany of American cotton is correspondingly restricted or curtailed. . . .

Identical in Effect

Comparison of the present German practices and those considered in the above-mentioned opinion of the Attorney General shows that they are identical in purpose and effect.

Adopting the language of that opinion (pp. 497-498), the present practices, like the former, "are . . . for the benefit of German exporters and enable them to export their goods so as to be in a position to compete with our domestic products . . .;" under them, "Export transactions are completely controlled by the German government, which permits only such exports as it deems to be in the German interest, and the devices described are means by which the German government enables the German exporters to export without incurring loss;" "the German authorities also completely control imports into Germany, permitting only those which are deemed for the benefit of that country;" and, manifestly, "The whole policy indicates a desire to encourage exports from and discourage imports into Germany. . . ."

In an opinion, dated June 2, 1936 (38 Op. 489), the Attorney General had occasion to consider certain practices then prevailing in Germany, including that of currency manipulations by the German government through "controlled," frozen," or "blocked" mark accounts known as "Aski mark accounts" and "Barter mark accounts," and held them to constitute "the payment or bestowal, directly or indirectly, of bounties or grants upon German exports" within the meaning of the above-quoted section of the Tariff Act of 1930, "calling for the imposition by the Treasury Department of countervailing duties" under that statute.

Since the German practices now prevailing are identical in purpose and effect with those discussed in the above-mentioned opinion of the Attorney General, it follows that they likewise call for the imposition by the Treasury Department of countervailing duties.

Decision Re-examined

From other data available, it appears that in December, 1936, the German government was advised, with your approval, that certain practices then proposed by the German authorities to govern the exchange of proceeds of American goods sold to Germans for German goods sold to Americans would not call for countervailing duties.

An examination of those practices, however, shows a fundamental difference between them and the practices now under consideration.

The cormer contemplated that both the sales of the American goods and the purchase of the German goods concerned were to be upon an uncontrolled market "at the current fair German open-market prices for such goods," while the latter involves a controlled market for both American and German goods, and, as to American goods, prices arbitrarily fixed by the German government.

The practical effect of the present practices is the same as that which would flow from the imposition and collection by the German government of a special duty or impost upon American goods and the subsequent use of the funds thus derived to subsidize German exports to America in order to enable German exporters successfully to compete in the markets of this country.

In so far as they involve imports into Germany of American goods, such imports are restricted to essential raw materials which Germany does not produce in quantities sufficient to supply its needs, and which, therefore, must be imported. Instead of permitting those raw materials to be purchased at world prices and paid for in foreign exchange, as is customary in international trade, the German government requires them to be purchased and paid for under the practices outlined.

Thus burdensome import restrictions are imposed upon American goods and at the same time substantial subsidies are bestowed upon German goods exported to this country.

It is my opinion, therefore, that it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to impose countervailing duties under section 303 of the tariff act of 1930 upon such goods imported into this country from Germany as are affected by the practices outlined in the above-mentioned memorandum of November 28, 1938, and that the proposed Treasury decision, copy of which accompanied the memorandum, is appropriate in form to carry out that purpose.

Respectfully,
FRANK MURPHY
Attorney General.

The acting commissioner of customs sent the following telegram to all United States collectors of customs:

"State Department having today advised Treasury Department that in view of the recent military occupation of the Province of Ruthenia (Carpatho-Ukraine) by Hungarian military forces and the assumption of control over these areas by the Hungarian authorities, the State Department, while not recognizing any legal basis for the changed status of Ruthenia, is obliged by existing circumstances to consider that that part of the Czecho-Slovak Republic is now under the de facto administration of the Hungarian authorities, products of the area mentioned exported from any country on or after March 19, 1939, shall be regarded as products of Hungary for the purpose of the marking provisions of the tariff act of 1930 and for determining applicable rates of duty. Give importers all possible notice. Apply provisions article 822 (e) customs regulations 1937 in determining dates exportation.

W. R. JOHNSON.
Acting Commissioner Customs."

Rumania

there was no likelihood of Rumania accepting comprehensive Nazi economic proposals.)

The impression prevailed nevertheless that Germany had made certain proposals regarding German-Rumanian trade, including plans for disposition of Rumania's petroleum, which Rumania declined to accept.

Further negotiations therefore were in order with the Rumanians, impressed by the political developments of the week open to suggestions from Germany.

Dr. Wohlthat, Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering's economic adviser, has been here since early this month. He came to Bucharest to regulate technical problems concerned with payments and the exchange of products between the two countries.

Rumania and other Balkan countries sell vast quantities of food and raw materials to Germany but regard too much such business as unsatisfactory because raw materials are exchanged for manufactured products which Germany has attempted to dump into the Balkans in excess of the needs of those states.

A joke current in the Balkas is that each farmer has ten cameras because cameras are all he can get from Germany for his wheat.

Thus the Balkan nations in the past few years have been trying to sell to the western European democracies and to the United States to avoid being drawn completely into the German economic system.

They want gold and free currencies, which Germany cannot supply.

Substantial indications that both France and Britain would buy more from the Balkans have stiffened Balkan resistance to economic domination by Germany.

Events Reveal How Czechs Were Conquered From Within

Kundt Led Political Pawns In Campaign to Frame Invasion's Excuse, Hacha Stood Ready to Yield

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 18.—Adolf Hitler's third bloodless territorial acquisition in a year was built on a carefully planned and executed propaganda campaign by Nazi experts in Czecho-Slovakia.

Spearhead of this high powered propaganda drive was Ernst Kundt, Czecho-Slovak deputy who was trained in the Konrad Henlein school which successfully brought Czecho-Slovakia's Sudeten regions into Germany last autumn.

Behind him were undercover agents and operatives. They all had one purpose: To bring Czecho-Slovak political policies into line with National Socialism in preparation for complete Nazi domination as Austria had been prepared for union with expanding Germany.

Events of the last few months in their chronological order show the success of the propaganda campaign which opened the way for German troops in Bohemia and Moravia.

Kundt, who co-operated fully with Henlein while heading the German delegation in the Czecho-Slovak Parliament, was left inside Czecho-Slovakia to lead the Nazi campaign after the Munich accord, September 23.

Appointment of Frantisek Chvalkovsky as Prague's foreign minister placed a pro-Nazi at the controls of Czech diplomacy.

As undercover agents met in Czech cities under swastika banners, the steam-roller movement gained momentum.

Even while Germany was declaring officially that she was "uninterested," Nazi agents in Bratislava were bringing their activities to a finish. Tiso was displaced by Karl Sidor as premier on accusations of encouraging separatist agitation. But Tiso remained the white hope of the Germans.

Radio Provided

Ferdinand Durcansky, ousted by Prague from a cabinet post along with Tiso, was given use of a Vienna Nazi radio station to attack the Sidor government. Slovakia declared her independence of Prague. Carpatho-Ukraine, third part of the federal state, tried to follow suit.

At this propitious moment, Kundt again stepped forth, borrowing a page from the story of Sudetenland.

First rumors, then reports and finally flat assertions accused the Czechs of "terrorism" against Germans. Casualties were said to be mounting and Hitler, "protector of all Germans," was "forced" to intervene.

Stratoliner Falls 2 Miles; 10 Found Dead

2 Dutch Executives Killed as $500,000 Test Plane Crashes

transportation department of the Netherlands government; also an engineer of the state airworthiness board of the Netherlands government.

P. Guilonard, believed to be an official of the Netherlands airline, K. L.

Harlin Hull, Boeing test pilot, at the controls when the stratoliner was last contacted by radio.

Earl Ferguson, test pilot.

Harry West, electrician.

William Doyle, engineer.

Ben Pearson, Boeing salesman.

Julius Barr, test pilot.

Ralph Cram, head of the Boeing aeronautic unit.

Jack Kilstra, engineer.

All except the Dutch officials were from Seattle.

Today's disaster came while four of the 74-passenger super-clipers already delivered to Pan-American, were making or preparing for pioneer flights on Pan-American routes over land and ocean. One is at Baltimore ready for the start of transatlantic service; its sister ship is en route East to joint it; another superclipper has just returned to San Francisco from its maiden flight to the Orient, and another is winging westward across the Pacific for the first time.

It had not been determined whether the craft that crashed today was to be delivered to Pan-American or T. W. A.; whichever line bought it would have cut its flying schedules down by many hours.

Hours after the crash today, the reason for it remained as mysterious as when the stratoliner suddenly nosed to earth from 10,000 feet above Washington timberlands.

It remained as mysterious as the Mid-Pacific crash of the Hawaiian Clipper last year.

Arndt Jacobsen, Alder storekeeper and justice of the peace, who witnessed the crash said:

"It was all over in a few seconds—less time than it takes to tell.

"I heard the plane's engines, and went out of my store to look at it. It was flying at about 10,000 feet.

Plunges to Earth

"As I watched, the motors suddenly seemed to stop. The plane hesitated for a second, then nosed toward the earth, spinning around and gathering speed.

"It passed through some low clouds. It seemed to level out for a second, then nosed down again and plunged straight into the earth.

"Some other people say they saw a wing fall off just before it hit the ground, but I didn't see that. My vision was obscured by trees just before the crash.

"There was a tremendous crash. I took a breath for the first time and ran toward the scene—a little ravine in the wooded country just outside of Alder. The plane was demolished."

Some experts theorized that something may have gone wrong with the air-conditioning equipment.

For the comfort of passengers in the rarefied atmosphere of the substratosphere, it had a specially designed air-conditioning system, by which air was taken in at the edge of the wings, subjected to pressure by compressors to bring it to normal conditions of the lower atmosphere, sent through the sealed cabins, and let out through an exhaust pipe.

To Carry 33 Passengers

The cabins, hermetically sealed, were cylindrical, the better to withstand the difference in air pressure within and without.

The plane was to carry 33 passengers in the daytime and had ample sleeping accommodations for 25 at night.

In the ground tests, the cabins were thoroughly sealed and subjected to sub-stratosphere flight conditions. The outside of the plane was covered with soap and oil, so that bubbles would indicate any possible air leaks.

The Boeing firm originally began construction of one experimental plane for a pool of air lines, and later decided to build ten, of which T. W. A. agreed to buy four and Pan-American six.

Engineers had pointed out that sub-stratosphere flying would add to the safety of the air lines, since storm and ice conditions, the normal hazards of flying, rarely prevail in the upper levels.

Julius Barr, the Boeing test pilot, had survived Chinese and Japanese bullets and every hazard known to the airman, to return to the United States and meet death in the test flight over quiet Washington woods.

Piloted Marshal Chang

In 1934, he gave up his job as pilot with nited Airlines to be the personal pilot of Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang, Chinese warlord, in the Sino-Japanese conflict. He took an American-built plane to China, and flew for more than a year in the warlord's service.

Later, he engaged in mercy flights in the Hankow area, dropping food to flood-isolated Chinese villagers.

On one of the flights, he narrowly escaped death when his plane was riddled with bullets by Chinese bandits.

For two years he was personal pilot for Generalissimo and Mme. Chiang Kai-sek.

He returned to Seattle last December because, he said, it was "too dangerous in China."

He became one of Boeing's ace test pilots, and was co-pilot with Earl Ferguson, also killed today, in testing the stratoliner.

Ten Die When Stratosphere Plane Crashes

Farm Officials Called Here For Instruction

Secretary Wallace To Address Meeting Tomorrow Afternoon

In its first concerted effort to put a unified New Deal farm program back in the hands of farmers, the Department of Agriculture has called to Washington for a week of instruction 100 of its key regional officials, including 40 State directors for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The movement is in accordance with a compact signed at Mt. Weather, Va., last July between a committee from the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities and representatives from the agricultural department — looking toward elimination of friction over local administration of "plans from Washington."

Under the new plan of procedure, which will be explained in meetings opening tomorrow, committees of farmers will be organized in every county in the United States. Each will be expected to criticise and offer suggestions concerning any portion of the farm program, and particularly to voice sentiments concerning its local application.

No longer, declare the men who have helped develop the county plan, will various Federal farm agencies try to operate independently, their programs often inconsistent.

The Farm Security Administration, AAA, BAE, Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation, Soil Conservation Service, and other farm agencies will endeavor to develop a unified plan of action that may be adapted to local conditions.

Since the Agricultural Extension Service, which operates through the land grant colleges, is closer to farmers than is the 100 per cent Federal agency, the county committees will work under its supervisions. The county agent will be one of the ten committee members.

Wallace to Speak

One county in each State will be selected this year for an intensive experiment of the co-ordinated planning idea. Work will begin in each county, although two or three years may be needed to get the program into general operation.

Secretary Wallace will address the meeting tomorrow afternoon. Also on tomorrow's program are: H. R. Tolley chief of BAE; R. M. Evans, AAA administrator; W. W. Alexander, FSA administrator; H. H. Bennett, chief of Soil Conservation Service; D. A. Fitzgerald, Bushrod W. Allin, and Byron B. Hackett.

Before the week is ended, the men will have heard F. A. Silcox, chief of the Forest Service; T. H. MacDonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, and officials of almost every other division in the department. Particularly will the conference be loaded with speeches by experts from BAE, the reorganized division which will handle coordination and which now is the principal planning agency of the department.

New Y. W. C. A. Course Tells How to Travel in Europe

WPA Research Aide Who Covered 25,000 Miles Last Year Will Give Class Her Secrets on Getting by on One Language

How to travel in Europe without languages, money, time or war scares will be taught at the Y. W. C. A. in a six-week course opening Tuesday.

The professor in charge will be Frances Fox, Works Progress Administration research assistant, who last year did just what she will impart to her class. She traveled 25,000 miles speaking only English.

Her course will include tips on what souvenirs to bring home and what to do if seasick, homesick, lovesick or just sick.

Central and southern European travel will be stressed along with the British Isles and Scandinavia and Finland.

Subjects will be the titles to a book Miss Fox is planning on "Travel and How to Do It." Some of them are: "Are You an Unadulterated Patriot?" "Guides and How to Prevent Them," "A Word to Wives on Packing for Men," "Mercenary in Money Matters," "Customs Is a Custom," "Tips on Tips, and Also on Gyps," and "Enigmatic Menus."

'Eye's' 750,000,000 Winks a Second To Guide Planes

By the Associated Press.

Flight tests of a new radio eye, which winks 750,000,000 times each second to lead an airplane to a safe landing, will be started next month at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority announced yesterday that arrangements have been completed with the Army Air Corps to use its equipment and technical experts at Wright Field in testing the device. If it is approved, they said, it might be used on commercial airlines by next fall.

The winks of the radio eye are the oscillations of radio waves generated on the ground and projected as a narrow beam toward an oncoming plane.

By keeping the tiny dot of light cast by the electron beam centered on a screen in the plane, the pilot can keep his airplane squarely on the glide path outlined by the radio beam and reach a safe landing in fog, or under other conditions which necessitate flying "blind."

Two other dots of light indicate to the pilot the position of his airplane with respect to the ground.

The instrument uses one of the highest radio frequencies yet employed in aircraft radio development. The 750,000,000 winks or oscillations per second is equal to a radio wave only 16 inches long and approaches the infra-red range in the spectrum of light.

Such short waves are not affected by static resulting from lightning, snow, rain or other interference and are reliable under any conditions.

WONDERFUL RESULTS OF ALBERTY FOOD REPORTED BY THOUSANDS

$100.00 Will Be Paid by Ada Alberty If Alberty Food Fails to Do As Represented for BABIES

Before Use, 112 Lbs.

Five Months Later, 126 Lbs.

Gained 14 Pounds in 5 Months

Mrs. B tried various diets to increase her weight, and to build up her strength and vitality, she started taking Alberty Food. Her weight was 112 pounds. In the first week she noticed an increase in weight and gradual return to strength and vitality. Five months later she reported her weight at 126 pounds, a gain of 14 pounds.

UNDERWEIGHT Children MEN, Women

Every baby who has never gained an ounce in its life will absolutely gain within 48 hours with the use of Alberty Food, as directed. Ada Alberty's $100.00 offer to babies has never been won (and she welcomes the most difficult cases). Thousands of underweight children, men and women, have reported Alberty Food has increased their weight and thereby improved their health, strength and vitality.

And here is the reason: Calcium Phosphate, when needed in the human body, produces almost unbelievable results. Mrs. B of Hollywood can't say enough for Alberty Food. She reports, "I was always thin; after the first month of Alberty Food, I looked and felt like a different person. I have gained 30 lbs. and my stomach distress has shown definite improvement." A fire department captain reported relief from stomach distress and other complications. Others report increase in weight, strength and vitality. Mrs. E. writes: "At this time last year I was desperate. After taking Alberty Food, I gained 40 lbs. in 3 months; in 6 weeks I was able to work. The change was simply marvelous."

Another woman reports great improvement in the health of her 93-year-old father.

For infants, children, adults, the very aged, Alberty Food has increased assimilation and makes more available the necessary nourishment for those whose digestive powers are weak. Most users report immediate benefits. For Alberty Food provides calcium and phosphate balanced with protein and other organic minerals. Scientists agree that minerals are essential for proper nutrition—Alberty Food supplies the essential minerals. Also relieves acidity. By helping digestion and increasing available nourishment, it tones up the intestinal tract, thus protecting health and building resistance to disease and bringing better all-around health in case of malnutrition and acid stomach distress.

Nonresidents In D. C. Schools Cost $200,000

Ballou Says Others Live With Relatives Here on School Days

The free education of some 2,400 nonresident pupils in Washington public schools costs the District government about $200,000 a year, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, yesterday told the House sub-committee on District appropriations.

In addition, many pupils evade paying tuition by living with relatives here on school days, although their parents are neither District residents or workers, Dr. Ballou said.

While not indicating what action may be taken, the sub-committee instructed Dr. Ballou to obtain more specific information. Dr. Ballou will testify again tomorrow morning.

Blocked in Congress

The high cost of operating the District public schools system was held attributed to the fact the law requires the schools to admit the children of any Federal employes or other persons holding jobs in the District, regardless of their place of residence. Previously attempts to terminate free education for non-residents have been blocked by senators and representatives from Maryland and Virginia.

A change in the law to require that all non-resident pupils pay tuition was recommended by the Jacobs fiscal relations committee on the ground the present policy imposes unfair burdens on local taxpayers.

Hearing Ends This Week

The sub-committee on appropriations expected to conclude hearings on the 1940 District budget the latter part of this week.

Despite the reorganization plan for the welfare department prepared by Burdette G. Yewis, special relief investigator, Chairman Collins declined to predict what action the sub-committee will take.

Social Workers Praised in Lewis Report

Mrs. Florence Huff Has 'No Criticism' Against Her

High praise was given to social workers of the Public Assistance Division of the District government in an installment of the Burdette G. Lewis report on relief made public yesterday. And one person was given the distinction of having had "not one word of criticism" directed against her.

MRS. HUFF

In a 142-page booklet in which the personnel of the division was combed over by a series of experts obtaine d by Director Lewis, of the Congressional investigating body, from the Department of Labor, Department of Agriculture, the Social Security Board, Department of Commerce, and the Farm Credit Administration, Mrs. Florence M. Huff, district supervisor of the Northeast district office at 1428 U street northwest was specifically praised.

Donn Bent, lent by the Department of Labor for the investigation also paid tribute to the "excellence of performance," of the District Employment Center.

Elbert W. Smith, lent by the Department of Agriculture stated in a summary report, "It is clearly indicated by all investigators that the employes possess average or better qualifications for the duties to which they are assigned." Smith did state, however, that clerical and typing employes in the accounting and business managements sections "are weak from the standpoint of education and experience."

General management of the division from the point of view of a co-ordinated plan of procedure, classification of personnel, delegation of duties and clarity of policy, did not come off with any such shower of compliments.

"No less than three investigators," the summary stated, "indicated undesirable relationships existing between the director of the division and her subordinate officers. Mr. Yarbrough (William W. Yarbrough, of Lewis' staff) pointed out an unhealthy situation with regard to the co-ordination of the insurance department and the director's office, and to a certain extent a not too desirable relationship between the business manager and the director's office. Mr. Miller and Mr. Bent (W. B. Miller, Department of Labor) also discussed an antagonistic relationship existing between Miss Davies (aid to dependent children consultant) and the director's office. This should be immediately remedied. All the investigators have indicated the absence of a strong, centralized control act not so much as to policy but as regards attention to the detail operations."

Eden Calls Upon Three Parties in Britain To Unite in Present European Crisis

there be confidence in a Nazi signature? The truth is that negotiation becomes impossible on such a basis. To many in Great Britain who have hoped against hope—and as some of us believe, have hoped against evidence—that confidence could be placed in the Nazi word, the conquest of force under instructions from the present German government of territory which that government had so recently repledged itself to respect has brought final conviction. In the face of such methods all are now agreed no country has any protection save in its own armed might, its own policies and the determination of its people to resist.

Confronted with these events, the will of the British people is not in doubt. No time must be lost in giving that will expression by the assertion of our own unity and the development of our own strength. There is yet time, but not much time.

It was conception of the situation that confronts us that led me to urge in Parliament on Wednesday that we should for the time abandon party politics and unite to show the world the greatest possible measure of strength in policy and purpose. Nobody doubts the effect which the announcement of the formation in Great Britain of a government on the broadest possible basis would have in Europe and, indeed, throughout the world. That effect would be all the greater when accompanied by the knowledge that the new government was determined to pursue a foreign policy consistent with the realities of an international situation which none now dispute.

Situation Dangerous

Thus could Great Britain make her most immediate contribution to steadying a European situation now infinitely dangerous.

If we were actually in the midst of hostilities there would be no hesitation. There should then surely be none now to take a step which all are agreed would contribute to avert war. The British people, whose concern with party politics is infinitely less than some would believe, would warmly approve such a decision. To some, however, the difficulties in this proposal seem unsurmountable. Even if we accept their view, we cannot agree to abandon the attempt to secure national unity upon a foreign policy such as the present international situation demands.

If this unity cannot be secured yet by means of a three-party government, at least an earnest attempt should be made to secure it by means of consultation and discussion between the leaders of the three parties. There is nothing particularly novel in this proposal. Many times before in British history, upon vital occasions, either domestic or international, the leaders of the three parties have conferred and, as the outcome of their discussions, have reached some measure of agreement. The need of such agreement is as compelling today as it has ever been. Every interest, national or international, should urge all Englishmen to fresh efforts to reach it. Thus armed, we could to best advantage face the admitted dangers of the hour.

A Three-Fold Task

Nor is there any doubt as to the nature of the task that confronts us. It is threefold. First, we must reexamine British foreign policy in the light of the new European situation and of the strategic developments that are its immediate consequence. Secondly, Great Britain must consult with all those nations who share her outlook and her determination to preserve the basic principles of civilization. Thirdly, having as the outcome of our own examination and of those consultations determined British policy, we should proceed at once to the necessary military plans and preparations which are called for to give that policy its fullest effect.

It is not enough to maintain that because more than two years ago the British government agreed upon a certain definition of its commitments, there is now no need to revise that definition. We are living in a different world. The events of the last week, let alone the last year, are not to be ignored.

Fortunately, there is no reason to believe that the attainment of unity in Great Britain upon foreign policy is by any means an impossible task. It is true that since Munich, and indeed for the past year and longer, differences have been wide and deep. Lately these have not been conditioned by the ordinary party alignments. If, however, we examine the causes of the divergence of views after Munich, the new conditions of the present time are at once apparent. Last autumn there were in the main two schools of thought as to the future and it was the future that mattered just as it is the future that matters now.

Nobody in Doubt Now

One school believed that in the light of the satisfaction of German demands upon the Czecho-Slovak state and of the renewal of pledges by the heads of the German government, a new era of co-operation was opening for Europe. Others though they would have dearly wished to take that view were convinced that, despite all efforts, Europe had gained no more than a brief respite. These divergent schools of thought have only to be stated for it to be everywhere understood that the issue between them no longer exists. This, unhappily, how much more, the march of German troops into Czecho-Slovakia has finally obliterated.

Nobody is in doubt now as to the nature of the menace that shadows the world. That menace can yet be dispelled if Great Britain can realize at once unity at home and closer co-operation abroad. But there is no time to lose.

Banker Urges Trial Period For Railroads

Plan Advanced as Last Resort Against Nationalization

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 18.—Some leading railroad executives and Wall Street bankers said today they were studying a new, bold plan for railroad legislation as a last resort to stave off "nationalization in some form."

Recent news from Washington has convinced them, they said, that railroads would obtain only piecemeal, temporary help from pending legislation, and that remedies remaining under consideration out of those originally proposed would do little more than postpone a fate they are now coming to fear is inevitable.

Suggests Trial Period

One internationally known banker, active in railroad affairs for decades, summed the problem up this way:

"A whole generation of railroad management executives has grown up so calloused to regulation that it seemingly has forgotten that the only alternative to nationalization in some form is real management."

The proposal, which he initiated, and which is now being studied by some leading executives in the rail and banking field, amounts to this:

"Let railroad managements really manage the railroads for a trial period. If they fail, throw them out and let the Government take over. If individual executives or roads, given this final chance, dishonestly take advantage of their restored liberties, let them be heavily fined or jailed; let the penalties be so severe that no executive, no railroad would dare to resort to those ancient abuses which gave rise originally to over-regulation."

Two Main Alignments

The plan, in its present, tentative phase, has two main elements:

Eliminate arbitrary competition.

Make justified speedy rate increases or decreases possible, between fixed limits, with enlarged protection against discrimination.

It calls for these concomitant points:

No reduction in pay; no laying off of any man now employed; hiring of future employes on existing brotherhoods basis; but elimination of some existing arbitrary rules governing the use of employes, to "make efficient operation possible."

Full compensating protection to shippers and passengers affected by route, schedule, or rate changes.

Opportunity, under existing forms of regulation, to "earn money;" to "save money when possible," to "adequately reward investors and efficient management."

Minnesotan, Offered Post At Training School, Inspects It

H. E. Hegstrom Asked To Succeed Colonel C. D. Jones, Resigned

HAROLD E. HEGSTROM

Harold E. Hegstrom, superintendent of the Minnesota State Training School for Boys, has been offered a similar post at the National Training School here, to succeed Col. Claude D. Jones, whose resignation becomes effective Tuesday.

Announcement of the offer was made yesterday by Warren F. Martin, president of the Board of Trustees of the local institution.

Hegstrom was in Washington all last week inspecting the quarters at the local school. Employes at the institution said they were "very much impressed" with the Minnesota superintendent and hoped he would accept the new post.

A graduate of the Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minn., with postgraduate work at the University of Minnesota, Hegstrom was appointed to his present post in 1934. Prior to that time, he served as superintendent of schools in various sections of Minnesota, including North St. Paul.

Hegstrom, should he accept the offer, would assume his duties sometice next month.

The local institution, situated on Bladensburg road near the District Line, receives juvenile delinquents from the local Juvenile Court, as well as from various Federal District courts throughout the country. At the present time its population is approximately 400. It has about 100 employes and an annual appropriation for maintenance and operation of $$280,000.

Hazen to Study Bill to Prohibit Gas Price Frauds

Commissioner Hazen said yesterday he would study a proposal to the Commissioners by a group of motor fuel retailers to compel all gasoline station operators to post on each pump the price, including Federal and District taxes.

The bill also would prevent sale of motor fuel at a price below the net cost, plus selling expenses. No rebates, allowances, concessions or benefits to the customer would be allowed, nor lotteries, prizes, wheels of fortune, punchboards or other games of chance in connection with gasoline sales.

Fines for violation would range from $50 to $200.

Burke Demands Revised Labor Act

Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, said last night forces opposing any change in the Wagner Labor Act "may defeat their own purpose" by bringing about its repeal instead of revision.

Burke said, in a radio address, that the proper course was neither repeal nor to let the law stand unchanged. "Let the law be improved," he declared. "Not in haste, not in passion, but with the vision of real statesmanship this law may be rewritten to accomplish its lofty purpose."

Citation for heroism was given three patrol boys of the Cleveland School at Eighth and T streets, northwest, on Friday, in one of a series of assemblies celebrating the seventy-fifth anniversary of public education for colored children in the District of Columbia.

William Brown, Bernard Monroe, and James Smith were presented with an American flag pin by Principal J. P. Gillem for their "courage, tact and stamina" in an accident at Seventh and S streets, northwest.

The fifth grade pupils recited poems by Paul Laurence Dunbar, and Lucius Johnson sang Little Mother of Mine by Harry T. Burleigh. There was a talk by Leon L. Perry, supervising principal of the eleventh division.

Age Held No Bar In U. S. Service

An investigating committee appointed by Secretary of Labor Perkins said yesterday it had found that the prejudice against hiring older workers rested largely "on inadequate or erroneous information."

Author Terms Wagner a Hero For Quitting Hotel

Ruth McKenney, vivacious blonde author of "My Sister Eileen" and "Industrial Valley," yesterday joined the pickets in front of Willard Hotel for 30 minutes, and characterized Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York as a "hero" for quitting his picketed hotel.

The writer, in Washington to be guest of honor at a tea, declared that members of Congress who continue to live in hotels which are "being picketed for very good and just reasons" are not joining the side of labor.

"They all should move out," she said, "just as Senator Wagner did, I believe. He became a hero by moving out and all the others could, too."

Referendum on Reorganization Of D. C. Urged

Citizens Federation Also Requests Probe Of Liquor Traffic

A city-wide referendum on proposed reorganization of the District government was asked last night by the Federation of Citizens Associations which also went on record favoring investigation of the liquor traffic here.

The referendum would be intended to "advise Congress on the type of reorganization desired by the people of Washington," Chairman Thomas Lodge of the special committee on District reorganization, declared.

The proposed referendum was supported by Delegate William McK. Clayton who hoped, "balloting on reorganization will lead to a referendum on such questions as the sales and income taxes."

"At least the referendum will require the setting up of ballot boxes here," he said, "and I am in complete accord with any proposal which extends suffrage to District citizens."

Chairman Harry N. Stull, of the special committee on the liquor situation, reported that his group favored "investigation of the present regulation of the liquor traffic . . . including the enforcement of all laws and regulations, and violations thereof, with a view (in case the evidence adduced justifies such action) to recommending amendments to the present law . . . which will improve moral conditions generally in the city, give protection to churches, schools and residential areas and increase the revenues of the District. . . ."

During the debate on the report, Stull declared his committee had "sufficient evidence to justify an investigation," and added that "while our evidence might not stand up in court, we were assured by reputable individuals that there were violations of the liquor laws, especially in the delivery of liquor in response to telephone orders made by minors."

"Some of our own members," he said, "stated they knew of such violations."

The federation also voted to present a District flag to the Commissioners for use in the Municipal Building board room and went on record favoring the observance of April 12 as District Junior Day.

Hitler's Success Won't Last, Sir Willmott Tells Greeters

Britain and France Will Meet Nazi Advances 'With Every Force,' Says Londoner to Hotel Banquet

England and France will meet Nazi advances "with every force they have today," Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent for The Times of London, declared at a banquet of the Middle Atlantic Hotel Greeters Association at the Willard Hotel last night.

Declaring that two revolutionary movements were sweeping the world today—the Russian and the German—Sir Willmott said European democracies "should not be shut off from this country."

Lewis asserted the "world is in the grip of a revolutionary movement," but insisted that the dictatorial drive was only a "by-product of democracy."

Nationalism resulting from the World War made a lasting peace impossible, with the result that nationalism is the "most powerful force in the world today," although there are now strenuous attempts to bring power politics to an end.

Lewis hinted that Hitler's success would not last long. He asserted that a revolutionary movement in "any country is like a spinning top and can only remain erect if the movement continues unopposed."

Referring to the current hotel strike, Harry Somerville, manager of the Willard, said he hoped for an early settlement.

Officer elected at an afternoon business meeting were G. Stuart Bingman, of the Chevy Chase Club, president; Paul Mangan, of New York, vice president; John Donley, of the Continental Hotel, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Elsie Kopel, president of the Women's Auxiliary.

Labor Awake To Red Peril, Says Dr. Ryan

Communists Called 'Total Loss' in Radio Address

New York March 18.—Most of the labor unions that have been deceived by Communists striving to bore from within are awakening to the fact that the Communists are a grave liability, the Right Rev. John A. Ryan, professor of social ethics of the Catholic University of America, said tonight in an address over radio station WMCA. Mgr. Ryan spoke under the auspices of the American Jewish Federation to combat Communism and Fascism.

Mgr. Ryan criticized those who term Soviet Russia a democracy. The Soviet, he said, meets no part of the definition that a democracy is "a form of government in which the supreme power is retained by the people and exercised either directly or indirectly through a system of representation."

He added: "Should the Communists ever obtain political control in the United States, they would prove as deceitful, as dictatorial, and as cruel as their 'comrades' in Russia. For they have the same philosophy, the same selfishness, the same training, the same tactics, the same purposes. They are an unlovely and impossible sect. In fact, they are a total loss."

Social and Law Fraternities Hold Parties

Sigma Nu Phi Has 'Rushing;' Phi Sigs and Alpha Theta Phis Dance

Legal and social fraternities of several Washington colleges held belated St. Patrick's Day celebrations with dinners and dances last night. Several of the affairs were annual events.

The spring "rushing" dance for potential members of Sigma Nu Phi, International legal brotherhood, was held at the Washington College of Law by officers and members of the local Oliver Wendell Holmes Chapter.

Among those present were Godfrey L. Munter, past president of the District Bar Association and lord high chancellor of the fraternity; Dean Grace Hays Riley, of Washington College, and members of the faculty.

"County Fair" put on by Alpha Theta Phi and Phi Sigma Kappa fraternities of American University proved a drawing attraction in the institution's big gymnasium.

Alpha Sigma Lambda legal fraternity of Benjamin Franklin University held an annual St. Patrick's dance at the Wardman Park

Phi Delta Theta held its annual spring dinner at the Carlton hotel.

Press Chief Here to Arrange For Visit of Danish Royalty

Crown Prince and Princess Will See Government Buildings and Historic Places Here, Go to Both Fairs

Karl Eskelund, 49, press chief for the foreign ministry of Denmark, visited Washington yesterday to pave the way for the American tour of Crown Prince Frederic and Crown Princess Ingrid.

The royal couple will spend three days in Washington after opening the Danish exhibit at the New York World's Fair May 2, Eskelund said. Their visit will start with a day of sightseeing through government buildings and a trip to Mt. Vernon May 6.

Next day they will meet members of the Danish community here and members of diplomatic and official circles in two receptions at the Danish Legation. They will visit Annapolis before returning to New York to sail for home on the Queen Mary May 10.

Eskelund said he planned to travel 6,000 miles over the route mapped out for Prince Frederic and his party, arranging details of their tour and meetings with Danish-American groups. He will leave for Detroit tomorrow.

With the Danish Minister, Otto Wadsted, Eskelund will meet the couple at San Pedro, Calif., April 6. Through April they will pay flying visits to a score of major American cities. They will see the Grand Canyon, the San Francisco Fair, Boulder Dam, Niagara Falls. On April 30 they will arrive at Hyde Park for a two-day visit with the President and Mrs. Roosevelt. In the party will be Countess Sicylle Reventlow, lady-in-waiting to the princess; Capt. Commander Fr. Waelbach, naval aide, and Johann Vest, chmaberlain.

Prince Frederick is a Captain Commander in the Danish navy, member of the Danish State Council, and has directed Danish representation in international exhibitions in Brussels, Paris and London. Princess Ingrid is a leader in Girl Scout activities and welfare work for the blind and deaf. They were married four years ago.

Where's Miss Lake? Medford, Mass., Can't Open Safe

Medford (Mass.) officials last night were faced with a dilemma and started a search in Washington and nearby Virginia for the key to the situation.

There's a city safe in the Medford city hall. It opens by combination. There were only two persons who knew that combination. One of them, the city clerk, died yesterday; the other was vacationing near Washington, her exact whereabouts unknown.

So Medford police requested Virginia State police to find Mary Lake, city employe, so they can open the safe tomorrow for business as usual.

Early Action Likely on D.C. Guard Armory

Roosevelt Confers With Brig. Gen. Cox And F. A. Delano

Prospect for early action on construction of a District National Guard armory appeared brighter than at any time in months last night after a conference between President Roosevelt and Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commanding general of the District militia.

On leaving the White House, Gen. Cox, who has been working for an adequate headquarters building ever since he was named commander last May, indicated action might be expected this week.

Project Sidetracked

The commission has consistently recommended that the armory be erected at East Capitol street and the Anacostia. The project was placed on the agenda of the planners' monthly meeting which ended Friday but it was sidetracked, presumably to await the outcome of yesterday's White House discussions. Delano was present at the armory conference yesterday.

Militia officers and supporters have been trying for years to get the District National Guard out of its antiquated quarters in the old National Hotel building at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest and into a modern structure.

To date, however, funds have been withheld. Congressional approval was given for the District Commissioners to apply for a PWA loan but the request was not granted.

Other Ideas Hinted

The planning commission's sudden sidetracking of the armory issue at its recent meeting, considered in conjunction with the report that the President thinks that an armory and auditorium might well be combined under a single roof, lends weight to the belief that he may recommend a new approach to the problem this week.

Instead of building an armory at the foot of East Capitol street and an auditorium at Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, as the planners have urged, a combination structure at one site or the other—or possibly some other location—may be advanced by the President.

"What I want," he said, "is to see an armory built. Its location and its auxiliary uses are secondary."

The thing to bear in mind, he added, is that Congress is approximately at the half-way mark in its session and nothing has yet been done to provide a suitable armory. It is important that a start be made before adjournment, he pointed out.

Capital News In Brief

Bandit Ignores Police

Thirty police were around the corner at headquarters, two others in a scout car, were only 30 feet away, picking up broken glass. But the bandit who robbed the O'Connor liquor store at 214 Sixth street northwest showed little concern last night—even when a drunk walked in during the holdup.

Victimized was Paul Burke, 31, of 1331 East Capitol street, former Eastern High School athlete. The bandit got $20.

Cat Scratches Rescuer

William Daniels, 17, of 513 Ninth street northeast, rescued a drowning cat yesterday, and for his pains was so badly scratched and bitten that he had to be given antitetanus injection at Casualty Hospital. Daniels climbed down a manhole at Ninth and F street to save the ungrateful feline.

Masked Man Robs Grocer

A handkerchief-masked robber last night held up Frank W. Dunner, of 1358 Monroe street northwest, in his grocery, 3541 Fourteenth street northwest, and left with $20.

Abducted D. C. Driver Robbed In Maryland

A Washington truck driver was kidnaped at the point of a gun last night, driven into Maryland, and robbed of $48.60, he told police.

Willis H. Strawser, 25, of 950 Twenty-fifth street northwest, operator of a Coca-Cola truck, was halted by a red light at Fourth and N streets northeast. As he stopped, a colored man whipped out a gun and moved in beside him. A second bandit opened the other door and took over the wheel.

The armed robber held the gun at Strawser's side, as the second drove the truck to the vicinity of Largo, Md., where they robbed the driver.

Stranded but unharmed, Strawser tramped for more than a mile before he could reach a telephone.

Rites Wednesday For Mrs. McCully

Mrs. Ellen I. McCully, 62, wife of Samuel F. McCully, died yesterday at her home, 1307 B street southeast.

Born in Philadelphia in 1877, Mrs. McCully was educated there and was married November 29, 1900, at Norwood, Pa. She came to Washington the same year.

Surviving, besides her husband, are one daughter, Sister Mary Michael, of Orange, Calif., and four sons, William F. McCully, of St. Albans, N. Y., and Frank A., Joseph A., and Samuel F. McCully, jr., of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at the home Wednesday at 8:30 a. m., followed by mass at Holy Comforter Catholic Church at 9 a. m.

Stephens Named Civil Service Aide

The Civil Service Commission yesterday announced appointment of Winston B. Stephens, formerly director of personnel with the Farm Security Administration, as director and co-ordinator of training.

400 Attorneys and Legal Students Pay Tribute to Colonel Clephane At Annual Banquet of George Washington U. Law Association

'Proud He Has Lived With Us,' Asserts President Marvin

Members of the District bar and bench and students and faculty of George Washington University last night joined to honor Col. Walter C. Clephane, professor of law for 39 years and chairman of the District Bar Association's committee on admissions.

More than 400 lawyers and students at the twenty-second annual banquet of the George Washington Law Association, held at the Mayflower, following their tradition of dedicating each year's banquet to a distinguished alumnus, heard three speakers praise Col. Clephane's unflagging interest in the university.

"His calm influence, good judgment, sense of values and progressive conservatism have played a great part in the extraordinary progress made by George Washington Law School in the past four decades," said Dean William C. Van Vleck.

Presented with Biographies

Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of the university, described himself as "humble before Col. Clephane's service, proud he has lived with us."

Justice James M. Proctor, of the District Court, after lauding the guest of honor's "clarity of thought, earnest desire to help his students and brilliant record as an advocate," presented Col. Clephane a set of biographies of distinguished jurists in behalf of the association.

A more serious threat to traditional principles of American Government than any Communist or Fascist movement today confronts the country, Representative Donald McLean (Republican), of New Jersey, member of the class of 1906, told the diners.

Hits Trade Agreements

"The danger," he said, "is that those who are charged with the responsibility of preserving our Government may themselves provide the machinery by which it may be destroyed."

Trial by jury has already been abolished in certain fields of jurisdiction by substitution of boards and bureaus with power to impose fines for violation of statutory provisions he charged.

Trade agreements negotiated by the State Department clearly violate the constitutional provision that treaties with foreign nations shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, McLean contended.

Democratic Split Widens On WPA Fund

Roosevelt Radio Appeal Considered By House Leaders

By International News Service.

Administration leaders yesterday showed concern over reports of a wide split among House Democrats over President Roosevelt's demand for $150,000,000 in additional WPA funds and a move to revamp the social security system's tax rates.

The situation will be reported to President Roosevelt tomorrow at a White House conference. In event that the House refuses to approve the $150,000,000 in relief funds, Administration leaders plan to urge Mr. Roosevelt to make a radio speech to whip Congress into line.

Uncertain of whether they have the votes, Administration supporters will force a showdown in the House appropriations deficiency sub-committee on the WPA supplemental fund Wednesday.

Senate Fight Seems Certain

Doubt was expressed, meantime, whether Congress will act on the request in time to prevent WPA Administrator F. C. Harrington from issuing orders to drop 450,000 reliefers from the rolls on April 1.

Even if the House acts favorably next week, a bitter fight in the Senate appears certain. The economy bloc there is well entrenched.

The House Ways and Means Committee, seeking to clear the way for revision of the corporate tax structure to aid business, announced it would conclude hearings next week on proposed revision of the social security act.

In a move to block sentiment for radical reduction in the social security taxes, the Administration yesterday produced as a major witness Dr. Edwin E. Wittee, of the University of Wisconsin, who decleared the present pay roll tax scale was inadequate to meet pension payments in the future.

"Legalized Embezzlement"

Representative Gearhart (Republican) of California, charged use by the Government of pay roll taxes to pay its operating expenses instead of holding the money for pensions was "legalized embezzlement" and assailed the pay roll taxes as "cruel and unjust, bearing upon the poorest, humblest part of the population."

The Treasury, meantime, reported income tax collections for the first 16 days of March aggregated $252,979,382, compared to $338,256,596 in the same period last year. With returns yet to be compiled, the department believes collections will reach $450,000,000, as against more than than $700,000,000 in March, 1938.

Fire Destroys $500 In Hotel Furniture

Fire broke out yesterday in the furniture storage basement of the Shoreham Hotel, where several valuable pieces of furniture were said to be stored. Firemen said the blaze apparently started in an overstuffed chair. Damage was estimated at $500.

Jitterbugs' Idol Interviewed

Benny Goodman reversed the usual procedure and asked a few questions himself last night. He is shown conducting an interview with Carolyn Gould, of Bethesda, Md., backstage at the Earle. The Swing King, Miss Gould and some members of the company were heard on a radio program last night

Brookings Body Loses Appeal For Tax Refund

Request by Brookings Institution for a $191.12 refund in business privilege taxes was turned down yesterday by Jo V. Morgan, of the District Tax Appeals Board.

The institution, incorporated in Delaware, has its main office at 722 Jackson place northwest. It claimed it had not been in business in 1936, the year for which it was taxed, and that it was exempt from the tax since it was an educational foundation.

Morgan, in his verdict, said the institution operated an office building at 1726 I street northwest and received gross rentals that year amounting to $49,778.85. The building, he said, was in direct competition with other office buildings, which pay a tax on their rents.

Rev. W. E. Main to Speak In Goodwill Chapel Here

The Rev. W. E. Main, of Arlington Methodist Episcopal Church, will speak at the Goodwill Chapel service in the auditorium of Goodwill Industries, 1218 New Hampshire avenue, tomorrow at 8:15 p. m.

Wednesday night the Rev. A. R. Bird, of the Presbyterian Church of the Pilgrims, will preach.

Cook and Butler To Testify for Mrs. Stinson

Servants who worked in the Wyoming avenue home of wealthy, 54-year-old Mrs. Pepita Crounse Stinson, will testify tomorrow at the opening of the second week of her annulment trial before Justice Luhring in District Court.

Mrs. Stinson, claiming she was drugged into wedding Joseph Whitlaw Stinson, seeks annulment and return of money she said she gave to him. He claims she forced money on him.

Attorneys Alvin K. Newmyer and A. K. Shipe, for Mrs. Stinson, said Nannie Henry, colored cook, would complete testimony she began Friday. Thomas Brown, colored butler, other servants and tradesmen will follow. They expect to rest her case Wednesday. Stinson's attorneys, Carroll L. Beedy and George Horning, jr., said Stinson's story will require a week and a half.

47 States Join Move

The new Federal-State co-operative plan for wildlife restoration throughout the Nation has won the interest of 47 States, 31 of which already have submitted definite proposals for 67 projects, the Bureau of Biological Survey, administering the program, announced yesterday.

85 Orphans Visit Fire Headquarters

Sixty boys from St. Joseph's Home and School and 25 from the Episcopal Home for Children yesterday had a good look at District fire fighters and fire engines. Guests of Chief Engineer Stephen T. Porter, of the Fire Department, they visited the engine house at Thirteenth and K streets northwest and were shown equipment and apparatus by members of the Firemen's Association. Later they visited Chestnut Farms Dairy. Transportation was furnished by the Capital Transit Co.

Firemen Give Boys Club $1,000

Chief Engineer Stephen T. Porter, of the District Fire Department, yesterday handed nearly $1,000, contributed by firemen, to Maj. Brown, superintendent of police, for the Metropolitan Police Boys Club fund.

Contributions in the drive for $75,000 yesterday totaled more than $44,000, Maj. Brown said. Funds will be used to maintain and operate club units and its summer camp this year.

Randolph Seeks $2,500 for Milk Inquiry; Expects Clash of Midwest, Nearby Producers

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee yesterday said he would recommend the committee ask for $2,500 to conduct the milk investigation authorized last week by the House.

A lawyer and an investigator will be hired, Randolph said, to work under direction of a sub-committee which will conduct the inquiry.

The investigation is expected to bring about a clash between representatives from the Midwest and spokesmen for the Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers, but it should be concluded in six weeks, Randolph said.

Bates May Decline

Representative Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, probably will be asked by the District Committee to conduct the investigation but has indicated he may decline. In that event, Randolph said, a special sub-committee may be named to conduct the investigation. Bates is chairman of the sub-committee on public health.

Representative Halleck (Republican), of Indiana, last night issued a statement saying he had no fault to find with District health regulations to protect food consumed by local citizens. He did object, he said, to the regulations being used "for ulterior purposes."

"The effect of the present milk act," he said, "is to erect trade barriers against the farmers of other States and to keep out of the District wholesome cream and milk."

Halleck pointed to the situation which permits cream to be imported from dairymen if the same health reed from the Midwest for local ice cream yet bars Midwestern cream for fluid consumption.

Smith Defends Farmers

Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, said Maryland and Virginia dairy farmers stood ready to deliver milk and cream into the District just as cheaply as Midwest quirements are applied to both.

"If the people of Washington want health standards lowered," he said, "the Maryland and Virginia farmers can compete with the Western farmers on price and undersell them because they won't have the transportation costs that the Westerners do."

The present District milk act prohibits the importation of milk or cream into the Capital from any farm that hasn't been inspected by District healtht inspectors.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

Just get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a reliable "WOMAN'S" tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and those disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life.

Pinkham's is WELL WORTH trying. —Adv.

ORTIZ SHACKLES TIGERS, NATS WIN, 4-3

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., March 18.—This is no time to jump at conclusions, of course, but before our eyes here at Tinker Field is being unfolded one of the charming inconsistencies of baseball. Fred Hutchinson, a young man for whom the Detroit Tigers paid $50,000 and turned over five players in addition to the Seattle club in a frantic bidding spree with the Yankees and Red Sox is out there getting his ears pinned back by the Nats in his first appearance against a big league club.

POVICH

In case you do not follow me, getting one's ears pinned back means, in baseball parlance, that a pitcher for his own safety is keeping his ears close-hauled. In other words, hits are rattling past his dome. In other words, he is getting the works.

That is what is happening to young Mr. Hutchinson, the $50,000 investment at a time when another young fellow named Roberto Ortiz, who is also a pitcher, is doing very well for himself. Unlike Mr. Hutchinson, who won 25 games and lost 7 for the Seattle club last season, nobody ever heard of Roberto Ortiz until two months ago and he didn't cost the Nats $50,000. He cost them only the plane fare from Cuba where they found him wielding a cane knife in the sugar fields.

$50,000 Rookie Has Bad Day

Anyway, there they were out there today—Hutchinson and Ortiz. And what happens? The American boy, teethed on a baseball and voted the most valuable player in the Class AA Pacific Coast League, has a horrible time getting the Nats out, while the furriner Ortiz, who had never pitched a ball game in his life, takes a three-inning turn and gives the hefty-hitting Detroit club no hits whatsoever.

As we were saying in the beginning, this is no time to judge, but on the strength of their performances today Ortiz looked like the $50,000 pitcher and Wonder Boy Hutchinson was merely an earnest young man who appears to have no chance to live up to his press notices.

Happily for the Tigers, however, one appearance is no accurate index to a pitchers talent and as yet there is no disposition by the Detroit club to regret its $50,000 investment. Lefty Grove, if memory does not play us false, was knocked out of the box the first 13 times he started against the Washington club early in his career, and he turned out to be a fair country pitcher.

Mr. Harry Salsinger, who has been traveling with the Detroit club nigh onto 30 years, and should know about such things, assures us that Hutchinson is a sound investment for the Tigers. Very logically he says, "the kid must have had something to stand so far above every other pitcher in the Coast League. You can't toss out 25 wins and 7 defeats in a league like that."

All Sourgrapes, Scribe Insists

There have been plain and fancy insinuations that young Hutchinson won't get by in the big leagues because he has no blazing fast ball, but Writer Salsinger has his own ideas about that. "It's the bunk. The Yankees and the Red Sox put out that report, but only after Detroit outbid 'em for Hutchinson. They liked him well enough until Walter Briggs stepped in with his $50,000 cash offer and five players in addition. Then they suddenly discovered he had no fast ball. Did you ever hear of sourgrapes?"

Mr. Salsinger also informs us that any press notices young Hutchinson may earn will be achieved solely by his pitching arm. He doesn't lend himself to writeups. "He's another Charley Gehringer. A four-word sentence is a long speech for him. He's just a nice boy, no vices, no extra-curricular activities, no popping off. You're apt to hear of him only when he wins or loses a ball game."

It seems that the Tigers could have saved themselves a slight matter of $46.500 on Hutchinson if the Detroit club had been in a buying mood two years ago. At the time the lad was a high school pitcher in Seattle and a friend of Manager Del Baker advised the Tigers he could be signed for a $3,500 bonus. But the Tigers weren't interested at that time. A year later they found themselves interested $50,000 worth.

Detroit Outfield Weak

As the Tigers shape up this season, there is nothing to disturb the belief that they are a pretty hopeless club as far as pennant prospects are concerned. In any appraisals they appear to be strengthened only on the pitching mound and in that department added strength is no certainty. They are hitching their pitching hopes to Hutchinson and to Schoolboy Rowe, whose sore arm is supposed to be vastly improved.

During the winter they traded off a couple of so-so pitchers, Jake Wade and Elden Auker—to the Red Sox for Third Baseman Pinky Higgins in an attempt to help their infield. But Higgins, beyond his hitting ability, is no ball of fire. In fact he has slowed up terribly. And the Tigers are gambling, too, on Frank Croucher at shortstop. Croucher, broken leg and all, is counted an improvement over the decrepit Bill Rogell.

It's in the outfield that the Tigers will probably be shamed. At this writing they haven't a single .300 hitter. A Detroit outfield comprised of Pete Fox, Roy Cullenbine and Dixie Walker is by no means potent. And Rudy York has sternly refused to take an outfield job. Detroit fans, inured for three decades to Tiger outfielders who could pound the ball—Cobb, Veach, Crawford, Heilman, Fothergill, Goslin come to mind—may not be exactly pleased with this 1939 outfield line-up.

On the Line

With Considine

New York, March 18.—Some of the better-known poison pen boys dropped into the Hippodrome today to congratulate Bill Farnsworth on being sued for $2,250,000, and while we were standing in line for Bill's autograph it reminded the loiterers of other suits—the kind that don't get shiny in the seat.

CONSIDINE

"You bums ought to be glad you write sports in America," said a fight manager who is fresh off the boat from England. "If an English sports-writer takes a deep breath he gets sued for libel. In England when a bum writes a piece he doesn't turn it over to the desk man, to correct the spelling; he sends it first to the legal department, to be deloused.

"Now from what I've seen over there, Henry Armstrong is going to lose his welterweight championship against whoever he fights over there in May. He'll land one punch near the belt-line of the bum—and bingo, they'll throw Henry out of the ring. But no matter how raw it is, do you think the British sports writers will say so? Don't make me laugh.

Fight Promoters' Paradise

"If they do they can be sued by the referee. If they say that the new champion is a bum and will be floored the first time out the new champ can sue. If they write up his life, praise him to the sky, but mention that he was once knocked out, he can sue—provided he can prove that he was only technically knocked out, like with a bad cut. It's all happened to English sports writers."

There came a short laugh and another manager who has worked behind fighters in England said, bitterly, "It couldn't happen to a sweeter bunch of guys."

This surprised us, for we thought the English sports writers were pretty good eggs.

"They're eggs, but not pretty good," the manager said. "In the first place they treat us like dirt. The first thing they ask you in an interview is, 'you won the World War, didn't you?' and when you try to get in a plug about your bum they cut you off with some irrelevant question. One of them asked me once what I thought of Len Harvey and I said I thought he was swell, had a great punch, was a sweet boxer, and had the courage of a lion, for though he was little more than a middleweight he really could tear into the big fellows. So the next day the guy comes out with a story that says, 'American fight manager brands Harvey as nothing more than a middleweight.' And, say, you oughta hear them put the blast on you American writers!"

Galento's Manager Has Hopes

"The fact remains," the first manager said, "that those guys have a tough time even writing a piece. Not long ago one of them called a fellow 'punchy.' Well the guy sued and collected $15,000, even though it was proved in court that he was batty as an old belfry. Tommy Farr got a chunk of sugar over there a couple years back, because Trevor Wignall called him a bum, in print.

"Al Delaney recently got some money out of a paper, too. One of them accidentally carried a story listing Delaney as a sparring partner for Eddie Phillips. Delaney collected. Defamation of character, or something like that."

Along about this time a sports writer who is being sued for a million dollars for insulting Man o' War, proudly took the floor, but he was interrupted by the arrival of Joe Jacobs.

"What are you fellows talking about?" asked the manager of Tony Galento.

"Oh, a fellow here was just telling us that in London a manager can collect plenty from any paper who calls his fighter a bum."

The cigar dropped out of Mr. Jacobs' puss in surprise, and he rushed out, apparently bent on buying two tickets to England, where he should be able to retire in three weeks.

Durham Beats Eastern, 34-20, Wins Title

Victors' 45th Consecutive Triumph

Bob Custer, D.C. Lad, Wins Trophy for Individual Scoring; Gantt Also Awarded

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Durham, N. C., March 18.—Basketball players of the Durham High School scored their third court championship of the season here tonight when they downed Eastern High School of Washington, D. C., 34 to 20, in the final game of the Duke-Durham Tournament of Champions, before a crowd of more than 3,000 fans.

Eastern High tonight went the way of other teams that have faced the Bull Dogs this season. It was the forty-fifth consecutive triumph for the Durham boys, who have been defeated but once in the last two seasons. Several weeks ago they won the North Carolina State championship from Charlotte at Chapel Hill, then the South Atlantic title at Washington and Lee University by defeating Fork Union Military Academy, 41 to 26, and climaxed their season with tonight's triumph.

Wins Player Trophy

Besides taking the championship tonight, Durham also came in for its share of the individual honors when Bob Gantt, forward, was given the most valuable player trophy. It was an honor rightly deserved, for during the tournament the hefty forward played a consistent brand of basketball, both defensively and offensively. He was all over the floor in the three games played by his team and proved a steadying influence on the Bull Dogs when they appeared about to falter last night in their game with the Mossville, Miss., contest, a clash they won by the score of 34 to 32. Gantt scored a total of 32 points.

Robert Custer, Eastern High forward, making his last stand, came through tonight and copped the high scoring trophy for individuals. He turned in a total of 37 points, and proved to be the spark plug of the Washington boys' scoring power. Custer is just about one of the best basketball players this section has seen in years, prep and high school players being taken into consideration, of course.

Lacked Usual Thrills

Tonight's game did not provide the thrills that occurred last night when Durham got such a scare from the Mossville outfit. The Bull Dogs took command of the situation early, and, except for a brief space of time when Eastern led, 1 to 0, never were behind. Cooksey gave the Eastern boys a single point advantage in the early seconds of the scrap, but a minute and a half after play started Durham had a lead of 2 to 1, thanks to a field goal by Cedric Loftis. They never were headed after that.

The first period saw most of the scoring, Durham getting 17 points and Eastern 8. The Bull Dogs scored 6 points in the second quarter and Eastern 3. Eight were made by Durham in the third stanza, to 5 for Eastern. The Washington boys outscored the Bull Dogs in the fourth period, 4 to 3.

Point-to-Point Scenes in Warrenton Race

The stone jump in Warrenton's point-to-point race proved a minor obstacle to Capt. R. J. Kirkpatrick and John Hinchley (upper) yesterday. They weren't fast enough to capture the trophy, however, which was donated by Frederick Prince (lower photo, left). Kern to Quit As Coach at Carnegie Tech

Pittsburgh, March 18 (AP).—The Sun-Telegraph said tonight "collapse of the so-called Doherty plan" for assisting Carnegie Tech athletes financially would lead to the resignation of Football Coach Bill Kern after the 1939 season.

Pointing to the resignation of Jock Sutherland at Pitt and John (Little Clipper) Smith at Duquesne within an eight-day period, the paper said Carnegie's scholarship funds had dwindled, causing the gridders to become disgruntled.

"Kern's resignation," said the Sun-Telegraph, "which has been intimated by the blond former Pitt tackle star, now is almost certain, with the question of material—which in the final analysis was the real reason Sutherland quit Pitt two weeks ago—coming to boil.

"Members of the Tech sophomore and freshmen groups of scholarship players, disgruntled because they have been forced to work to help defray their expenses, are talking of striking. A protest meeting was held Friday and there are indications that the gridders won't report for practice when Kern calls spring drills a week from Monday."

The plan sponsored by President William E. Doherty of Carnegie called for alumni to assist athletes,

Oklahoma Wins Wrestling Title

Lancaster, Pa., March 18 (AP).—Capturing three individual titles, Oklahoma A. and M. tonight clinched its third straight national collegiate wrestling championship before a crowd of 2,000 at Franklin and Marshall College.

At the conclusion of the individual title bouts, the Aggies boasted 22 points, and Lehigh's Eastern champions were second with 11. The Engineers, however, had no chance of overcoming the Aggie lead in the consolation bouts for second and third place that were to follow.

Trailing the Aggies and Lehigh in the team race were Minnesota with 8 points, Illinois and Franklin and Marshall with 7 each, Indiana with 6 and Michigan with five.

Politics Suffers When 'Smart Boys' Play in New York

Roanoke, Va., March 18 (AP).—Basketball proved to be a more weighty matter than a college constitutional privilege at Roanoke College this month.

Students and the college paper, The Brackety-Ack, suddenly awoke to the fact this week that the time for election of student body officers, set by the constitution for the second week in March, had come and gone.

Student Body President Paul Rice, of Roanoke, a forward on the court combination known as the "Five Smart Boys," probable forgot all about the election in his anxiety to perform in Madison Square Garden, Dean Charles R. Brown, said today.

The election will probably be held soon after the Maroons return from playing New Mexico in New York Monday.

17 Nominated For Bowie's Opening Race

District and Maryland racing fans, unfortunate enough to have been without a winter vacation in warmer climes, have only a little more than a week to wait before they can swing back in action at the mutuel windows. On March 30, a week from the coming Thursday to be exact, the bangtails will start banging at Bowie. The Prince Georges County track gets under way two days earlier than the usual April 1 curtain-raising, to make up for some of the lost time due to the freeze-out that halted operations last November.

Dark Horse Advances In Annual Post-A.A.U. Basketball Tourney

Jewish Community Center's hopes of capturing the unlimited championship in the annual Post-District A. A. U. court tournament reached new heights last night as Ev Russell's powerful team hurdled the formidable Y. M. C. A. Reds in its dash toward the title, winning by a 48-22 count.

The game featured a night of brisk basketball, which saw the Alexandria Boys Club 120-pounders nose out Georgetown Boys Club, 26-25, in an overtime game; while the Hyattsville Girls gained the semi-final bracket in their class by walloping the veteran United Typewriter Grays, 32-10.

Sid Karp, ace J. C. C. forward, continued his sensational scoring spree with a new modern record for the tournament of 30 points, tallying frequently enough to whip the Reds single-handed. No less than five individuals tried to stem his point-gathering drive and the last, oddly enough, proved to be the only effective check. Joe Hahn, diminutive "Y" floorman, was the man who finally applied the brakes.

Al Scheinerman, tossed in 15 points toward the Center's victory, and played a smooth, effective floor game. Karp, incidenally, made no special effort to garner scoring honors, but made innumerable passes to Medford, Mass., March 18 (I.N.S.).—His lead never challenged in the last 5 miles, Gerard Cote, St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, runner, this afternoon won the North Medford A. C. 20-mile road race, heading a pack of 66 runners in the annual tune-up for the historic April 19 Boston Athletic Association marathon.

Cote's time was 1 hour, 54 minutes, 53 2-5 seconds, less than two minutes behind the record set last year by Johnny Kelley, Arlington, who failed to compete today.

Detroit Held Hitless by Young Cuban

Displays Fine Form And Great Speed in Mound Debut; Strikes Out Pete Fox

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 18.—In a baseball version of the calf slaughtering the butcher, Roberto Ortiz triumphed over the Tigers today in an amazing three-inning tableau on Tinker Field.

They were supposed to be feeding him to the tigers today, the Nats' bosses were, as they tossed into the pitching arena this tall young Cuban who is atempting to pitch in the big leagues with no pitching background whatsoever.

They were putting him squarely on the spot against a Detroit batting order that contained such names as Greenberg and Gehringer and Fox, and Rogell. They were still wondering if he knew how to stand on the rubber and if he could get his fast ball anywhere near the plate.

Well, he held those Tigers hitless, absolutely hitless. And the fact the Nats won a 4-3 victory over the Detroit club in their first exhibition game of the season is because Mr. Ortiz was a young ball of fire this afternoon.

Chucks Fast Ball

Sure, he walked two batters, and he made a wild pitch, and he committed a balk and he threw away a bunted ball. In all the rudiments of pitching, he was as green as that shamrock you were wearing yesterday. But when he reared back and started chucking that fast ball of his he was potent.

He had the Tigers plenty loose up there at the plate, most of 'em were keeping a discreet foot in the bucket. He struck out Pete Fox on one occasion when his pitch looked no bigger than an aspirin tablet, as it crossed the plate. He didn't need any brilliant support. The men behind him didn't have a hard chance.

And that isn't all. He truly had a large afternoon, this young Cuban boy who was cutting sugar cane in the Cuba hinterlands only two months ago. When he came to bat in the seventh inning with one Nats a run behind, what did he do but tie into one of Harry Eisenstat's pitches and knock it for a line-drive three bagger to left center field, the ball rolling into the hedges that bound the park.

He scored the tying run when rookie Outfielder John Welaj pumped a single into centerfield, and in the ninth inning Ortiz again led off with a hit that evolved the winning run. It was a high bounder in the infield and he streaked to first to beat it out. Eventually after Eisenstat walked Bluege intentionally, and Estalella unintentionally, to fill the bases, along came this same rookie Welaj, with another well-powered single to win the ball game.

Tigers Held to Three Hits

Ortiz, Welaj and Alex Alexander, they were the Nats' heroes today. In fact, the Tigers, who were held to three hits—all singles—would not have scored save for the wildness of Joe Haynes and a pair of damaging errors by Paddy Lewis, which gave them their three runs without benefit of a hit in the fifth inning.

Overflow gathering of 2,385 natives and tourists who sat in the proceedings got their first glimpse, like the Nats, of young Fred Hutchinson, the Tigers expensive rookie from the Coast League. And on the day when the Nats showed a couple of impressive bargain-counter rookies, Hutchinson was something of a flop in his first outing for the Tigers.

Manager Del Baker let him pitch the first five innings of the game and he was in trouble in every inning but the third. At the end of his turn Hutchinson had allowed sevent hits and two of the Nats' runs. A high wind blowing in the batters' face deprived the Nats of additional runs and Hutchinson showed nothing to disturb the report that he has no particular fast ball and the chunky

Bucky Harris Thinks Cuban Will Be Better Than Fred Hutchinson

Orlando, Fla., March 18.—"I'll take Ortiz."

That was Bucky Harris' short answer when he was asked to compare Fred Hutchinson, the Tigers' $50,000 rookie from the Coast League, and Roberto Ortiz, the Nats Cuban rookie following today's game with Detroit.

Prodded further, the Nats' manager declared:

"I don't care if the Tigers paid a million dollars for Hutchinson, I'd rather have Ortiz on my club. I'm talking from what I saw today. Ortiz may be farther from the big leagues than Hutchinson, but I think he'll make a better pitcher eventually.

"Hutchinson didn't show much today. I don't know if he has a fast ball. But I know that Ortiz has. That green pea may not know how to pitch yet but you can't ignore his speed. And out there today he wasn't giving everything. He can put a little extra on that ball when he gets a bit more confidence."

Harris' opinion of Ortiz's speed was shared by Hank Greenberg and Charley Gehringer, the "name" hitters in the Detroit line-up.

Said Greenberg: "That kid is amazing. His leverage is terrific and that ball looks like a pea coming up to the plate."

The usually silent Gehringer was asked his opinion by Harris. "I think you have something, Bucky," said the Tigers' second baseman. "When he learns some of the nicks things about pitching he'll be a swell pitcher."

The impression might have been that Ortiz was wild today. He walked two batters, made a wild pitch, and was almost constantly behind the batter. But your correspondent kept tab on him pitch by pitch and, interpreting foul balls and outfield flies as strikes, we have the following count on Ortiz:

In the three innings he worked, Ortiz threw 40 balls at the plate. Nineteen were called balls, and 21 were strikes.

Twice during the three innings he showed an amazing ability to get down the middle with his fast ball. In the seventh inning, against Gehringer, Ortiz after pitching three straight balls and no strikes, threw five consecutive pitches across the plate. Gehringer fouling off two and eventually flying out. In the eighth, with the count three balls and no strikes on Pete Fox, Ortiz was down the middle with four straight strikes, Fox fouling a pitch off before he struck out.

Guldahl and Bright Defeated in Best Ball Upset

St. Augustine Golf Enters Finals Today

Stahl and Harbert Defeat Favorites; Shute and Stark Remain in Running

By the Associated Press.

St. Augustine, Fla., March 18.—Marvin Stahl and Chick Herbert knocked off another favorite today and barged into the finals of the National Amateur Professional best ball golf tournament.

The Lansing, Mich., pro and Battle Creek, Mich., amateur—the tournament's surprise team—took the last big stride by whipping Ralph Guldahl, the national open champion, and Morton Bright, of Daytona Beach, Fla., 2 and 1.

The other finalists, Denny Shute, of West Newton, Mass., and Bill Stark, of Jacksonville, had a bigger margin of safety. They won, 4 and 3, over Jack Grout, of Hershey, Pa., and Maynard Ramsey, of Tampa, Fla.

$1,000 Awaits Winner

Tomorrow's final, like the matches today, is over the 36-hole distance. A $1,000 check awaits the pro member of the winning team and the losing money player can get a lot of consolation out of a $500 prize. Guldahl and Grout collected $200 each.

Since they won the medal Wednesday with a 17-under par 127 for 36 holes, Stahl and Harbert have advanced steadily at the expense of favored opponents.

In the first two rounds they disposed of the 1938 winners—Frank Moore and Bobby Dunkelberger—and the 1937 victors, Henry Picard and Frank Ford.

Stahl ran down a 40-foot putt on the 34th hole to put the crusher on the losers. He and Harbert teamed well, one usually managing a birdie or par when the other had a lapse.

Pair of Birdies

Harbert's best contribution was a pair of birdies on the sixth and seventh holes, both for wins. He dropped a 10-foot putt on the sixth and chipped within a foot of the pin on the seventh.

Blowing hot and cold, Guldahl evened the match on the 23d after he and Bright went to lunch two down. They both three-putted the 24th, however, and never again could catch Stahl and Harbert.

Shute had plenty of help from his husky amateur partner, who chipped in from 40 feet for an eagle three on the 26th.

Ramsey came to the aid of Grout, also, particularly when he erased the two-down morning deficit by winning the 21st and 22nd holes with birdies. He dropped a 25-footer on the 21st and an eight-footer on the 22nd.

Doering, of Chicago, re-elected president. Dr. Radcliffe is now director of the Oyster Institute of America, executive secretary of the National Oyster Dealers Association and director of the Sponge Institute of America.

He is an ardent but not scientific fisherman, according to best reports. Dr. Radcliffe is a charter member of the Washington chapter of the Walton League.

Kenwood and Capital In Excellent Shape

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

KENWOOD

Professional George Diffenbaugh, golf and green chairman Andy Bain and Greenskeeper Jack Athey are all getting a good workout at Kenwood as the course, clubhouse and pro shop are undergoing minor changes and improvements for a season that looks like the club's best yet.

A brief review of the alterations include 150 small pine trees for the golf course, to dot the first nine with clumps planted behind the seventh and eighth greens. New trees will be built on 10, 15, and 16, the latter lengthening the old "punch bowl" hole by 25 yards. Two new traps are under construction around the tenth and fourteenth greens.

The fourth green will be put in play the first of next month, to the right of the old one, the only green of the entire 18 that failed to stand up last year.

Tennis courts have been increased from two to four, while a new walk has been constructed from golf shop to clubhouse, and a new entrance from the clubhouse to the practice green. A trophy case and new stairway are club improvements, in addition to a new locker room for men swimmers.

Diffenbaugh, who will mark his first year with the club in May, after serving with Indian Spring and Roanoke last year, has engaged Lewis Fahrenwald and Wallace Robertson as assistants.

Fahrenwald is a graduate of the caddy ranks at Kenwood, where he chased balls for Diffenbaugh's lessons last year, and has been around the River Road course for six years. Robertson worked with George for two years at Indian Spring, and now with his professional baseball ambitions curbed is ready to go back to the golf line. The fourth member of the shop will be Billy, pet bulldog of the pro.

New Wood Clubs

Diffenbaugh has a newly designed set of woods, with a short compact head is his shop and sold two sets the first day they graced the racks.

John J. Gorrell heads the board of governors at the River Road Club, and works with Donal Chamberlin, of Kennedy-Chamberlin Co., owners of the club property. A. M. Ferry is chairman of the membership committee, Bain golf and greens head and R. E. Joyce secretary. Joseph A. Fisher is in his third year as manager.

Mrs. H. H. Hughes was elected women's chairman, and Mrs. Roy C. Miller, former vice-president of the Women's District Golf Association, tournament committee chairman.

Young golfers will probably prove the basis of the club team, with Tom Fitzgerald, Gonzaga, George Vass, Western and Frank Williamson all predicted for future stardom in District amateur ranks by Diffenbaugh, in addition to Jane Burke and Helen Spencer among the linkswomen. Johnny Bergelin and Levi Yoder are the outstanding simonpures among the members at the present time.

Bain, Diffenbaugh and the golf committee have one of the longest and most varied golf tournament schedules for the members of any club in the District ranks, while the Middle Atlantic Junior, District mixed Scotch foursome and proevents will also dot the Kenwood calendar.

The new women's par measurements of the United States Golf Association have lowered regulation figures for the fair golfers by four strokes, from 77 to 73, and a mark that is likely to stand regardless of the tournaments awarded by Mrs. Robert A. Lacey's committee in charge of District affairs.

Diffenbaugh, one of the most active pros in the District on the lesson tee last year, will start another prospective banner year by teaching the Mt. Vernon Seminary girl golfers next week.

CAPITAL

Capital Golf and Country Club, when under the name of Bannockburn was the host and toast of tournament golf in the District, is in the revival stage after the drought of several years ago lowered the club's standing.

Pro Tony Sylvester and the new blood that constitutes the membership of the Glen Echo Club, overlooking the Potomac River, claim the course is in the best shape in history, and that dates back past 1905 when the club was a member in good standing of the U. S. G. A.

The drought proved the undoing of one of the city's most famous and oldest courses, for the wells that provided the watering system went dry and there was no water for greens and fairways. Things went from bad to worse, and not until this year has the club really been back on its feet.

Will Be Private Club

After April 1 the semipublic signs will come down and Capital will be strictly a private club. A membership drive, headed by Chairman John Phelan, is producing, with the fine condition of the entire course, including the altered and better greens and new all-grass tees playing an important role in gaining signatures. Bill Pendergast, greens chairman for the second year, is responsible for a great deal of the improvement.

President Kenneth E. Spencer should be in the most enjoyable role of club president since the predrought days, while other officers include John Paul Jones, vice president, and A. O. Kephart, secretary-treasurer. The board of governors includes Roy Aten, James Hayes, Harvey Rabbitt, Frank Sullivan, T. P. Hayden, Thomas G. Herbert, Sylvester and Joseph Keating. George Molloy is the new golf committee chairman, while F. J. Hannahan is house committee chairman and A. R. Cleary, publicity.

Tony Sylvester is in his twelfth year at the club, starting in the spring of 1928 after assisting Tommy Armour at Congressional. Previous to that he worked with Armour at Sarasota, Fla. Tony's shop is equipped with a new "Tony Sylvester" wood and iron, copied after the one made for Tommy Armour and Bobby Jones in 1926. He has long been recognized as one of the finest clubmakers in the game.

Only One Loss

Tony is the staunchest believer in the club's comeback, and much of it is through his efforts. He will be assisted in the shop by Jimmy Kraft, a converted southpaw golfer. Kraft has been working for Tony for years, another graduate of the caddy ranks, in Tony's first year, and has worked his game down to a 78-82 shooter, after a switch from southpaw to right-hander.

C. Henry Cohen will be the only loss from last year's capable collection of Capital club swingers, who extended the Maryland State champion Congressional Team to 9½-8½ in a semifinal match. Billy Houghton, Molloy, Frank White, Pendergast, Allen Laing, Spencer and George Borsari are all improved golfers, and the membership drive may produce new stars.

Manager Ernest Piper has made a great improvement in the clubhouse, and a new feature is the cocktail room, that features Sunday afternoon entertainment and was packed to capacity in it's initial tryout. A new road to the club is a much-needed improvement slated for the next few weeks.

The club is also a playing and practice site for Georgetown's crack golf team, including Intercollegiate Champion Johnny Burke. Sylvester is coach of the Hoyas and their match with Bobby Brownell's Duke Team, one of the high lights of the local season, will be played over the hilly layout.

D.C., Baltimore P.G.A. Members Meet Tomorrow

Catonsville Conclave Will Plan Schedule For 1939 Season

District and Baltimore members of the Midle Atlantic P. G. A. will meet tomorrow at the Rolling Road course, in Catonsville, to plan a schedule for the year and play in a pro-pro event in the afternoon.

The schedule is expected to consist of only the sectional championship, won by Leo Walper the last two years, and the qualification spot for the National P. G. A.

The District mentors are expected to inform the Baltimore pros that they will compete in a varied schedule of events here, confine their tournament activities to the card, and not participate in the intercity pro-amateurs, which have not been successful in the past.

This plan was carried out in the latter part of the '38 season. Whether the Baltimore delegation will be so opposed as to withdraw from the organization is not known.

Indoor Court Tennis Meet in Semifinals

In the second round of the District's second annual indoor court tennis tournament, now being held in the gymnasium of the Central Y. M. C. A., Larry Sherfy eliminated Fred Carpenter in a close match, 2—6, 6—2, 9—7; Felix Silva won over George Fox, 6—3, 6—3; Paul Beretz took straight sets from Phil Marcus, 6—3, 6—4; G. Martinez beat David Smith, 6—2, 6—4, while Hugh Lynch advanced to the semifinals by eliminating Sherfy in a hard-fought match, 6—2, 6—4.

'American Golf' Gets Official Test Sunday

D. C. Players to Compete in Event Arranged Over Indian Spring Course; Scoring Will Be 2-Ball Match Play

William R. Stone's "American Golf" will be given an official test next Sunday at Indian Spring when 16 of the District's leading amateurs will attempt to prove that the interest of golf spectators lies in team scoring and not in the "personal prowess of celebrities in exhibition, or money circuit tournaments."

For the occasion, Roger Peacock and Tom Belshe will act as team captains, and the first nine will be divided as close as possible to Stone's idea of a typical course, 12 holes, with a yardage of 3,125 yards, with five par threes, five par fours and two par fives, a total par 45.

Course Divided

The nine-hole course, without the scientific shot-making aspects of Stone's courses, that will be constructed if the game should go over, will be divided, with the present first four holes and the eighth played as they stand. Five and seven will be played as par fives, by driving with an eight iron from the former and three iron from the latter, each from the back tee.

The sixth will remain the same, a par three, and the ninth will be converted into four par threes, with the players shooting to one green from four tees, 100, 125, 150 and 175 yards away.

The scoring will be a two-ball match play over the first four holes; four-ball medal play on the next four holes, and the four shots to the ninth green will be four-ball match play. The object is to show that all or either of the scoring systems may be selected for future use.

Gallery Can Watch All Play

The points of play have been so arranged that the gallery may watch tee shots or putting, without any wait, from different points of play. Seats will be placed around the ninth green, where the official observers will watch the play, and runners will keep the scores posted from hole to hole. The five-inch cup will not be used in the test match.

Matches between women golfers and professionals are slated to follow the men's amateur test, and then the consensus of opinion will guide Stone to his plan of constructing "American Golf" courses in 12 cities, with stadiums seating 60,000. Other gigantic plans will be made to put the game on a basis with football and baseball.

Accent on Short Game

The general idea is to place an accent on the short game, and take the play away from the long-hitters, the drawing card of the present-day tournaments.

The American Golf Committee, composed of Stone, author of the plan, Wiffy Cox, Bob Barnett, George Diffenbaugh, Al Jamison, Tommy Doerer, Gene Larkin, Tommy Ryan, Mel Shorey and Cliff Spencer, approved the plans for the test match in a meeting attended by several members Friday night.

The amateurs to compete have been selected from the east and west side of 16th street, although obviously several named will not be able to compete.

The squads:

EAST.—Roger Peacock, Bobby Brownell, Elliott Spicer, Harry Pitt, Volney Burnett, Ros Sasscer, Eddie Bean, Charlie Malone, Buddy Sharkey, Jock Olmsted, Lou Harris and Tommy Bones.

WEST.—Tom Belshe, Claude Rippy, Maury Nee, Louis Fuchs, Parker Nolan, Ralph Quinter, Earl McAleer, Tommy Webb, Levi Yoder, Billy Dettweiler, Martin McCarthy and Billy Shea.

Table Tennis Stars to Meet Hungary Here

What is becoming an annual glimpse at the world's best table tennis players will be afforded Washington on March 31 when Hungary's world championship team comes to Heurich gym to meet two of the top players in America.

Promoted by Morris Bassford, a Washingtonian who is a former president of the U. S. T. T. A., the match will find Sol Schiff, current co-holder of the world's doubles title, pairing with Izzy Bellis, Eastern champion, to represent the United States against Laszlo Bellak and Tibord Hazi, of Hungary.

Bellak, incidentally, is the U. S. open champion and has been a teammate of Hazi on Hungary's Swaythling Cup team for the past four years.

The match here will consist of four singles and a doubles with each two members of the rival teams playing the other in singles and pairing off in the doubles.

housewives are worrying about Christmas shopping next December, the horses will go round and round nearby tracks, and how the customers will come out remains to be seen.

While news has drifted in that this horse and that was in training at Bowie, concrete evidence that the meeting is close at hand was shown in yesterday's mail, when the line-up of horses for the four Bowie stakes struck the sports department in a Southern Maryland Agricultural Association envelop.

Rough Time Returns

Bowie will start the 13-day sesion with the ninth running of the Rowe Memorial Handicap, and a representative field of 17 horses has been named. First contested in 1930, when Jockey Lou Schaefer rode Battleship to victory, the Rowe Memorial always has provided an interesting race. Schaefer is now the W. L. Brann trainer of Challedon, the Maryland Kentucky Derby hope, and he will sadde Aethewold in this year's Rowe. Like the jockey, Battleship went on to greatness by winning the Grand National.

The Rowe will mark a return to action of J. Yancy Christmas' fine speedster, Rough Time. This frequent stake winner, now 4 years old, is reported ready for action. Florida racing will send several contenders to the race, including Wise Prince, owned by Felix Spatolo. Wise Prince did not fare any too well at Hialeah, but recently scored at Tropical Park. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt will be represented by Air Flame, while A. C. Compton's Sun Egret will attempt to make it two Rowe victories in a row.

Sun Egret led Parmelee T. and Clocks to the wire in the 6-furlong test last year, in time of 1:13 4-5. The race was worth $4,250 to the winner on that occasion.

Other horses likely to see action in the opening-day stake are Bomar Stable's Benjam, E. K. Bryson's Bunny Baby, Winston Guest's Drudgery, T. J. Hill's White Cockade, Mrs. E. G. Lewis' Pagliacci, Millsdale Stable's Rye Beach, Mrs. J. A. Nix's Woodsaw, Maj. Ral Parr's King Pharamond, Mrs. A. Pelliteri's Old Rosebush, Gustave Ring's Lady Maryland, Shandon Farm's Morstep and William Ziegler's Our Mat.

The second stake at the Prince Georges County track will be run on Saturday, April 1. It is the Bowie Handicap, $5,000 added, at a mile and 70 yards. Eight horses have been named for this test, which will mark the return to Eastern action of Mrs. A. J. Abel's Honey Cloud. The son of High Cloud made an unsuccessful invasion of California in an attempt to take down the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap. He pulled up lame in a race just before the big stake and was not in action.

but the paper reported there had been little response from the "clans," and instead of raising funds for incoming freshmen, officials are hoping to keep their present players in school.

Stiff scholastic requirements also have made inroads on the squad, causing the dropping of three players and placing of ten others on probation.

Kern, when contacted about the report, answered:

"Well, next year's a long way off. I'm worrying right now about what I'm going to do the next season, not what happens after it."

The resignation, if consummated, will give Pittsburgh's three major colleges a complete turnover in coaches.

Pitt Swimming Coach Resigns

Pittsburgh, March 18 (AP).—Pat Corr, swimming coach at the University of Pittsburgh, resigned today.

The university's athletic office said Director James Hagan received a letter from Corr stating that "you have been successful in your efforts to drive out those of us who have so long and faithfully served the university."

Corr ended 20 years of association with Pitt, first as competitor, then coach. His teams won 68 and lost 26 dual meets under his leadership.

Corr is in Amherst, Mass., with the Panther swimming team to compete in the Eastern Collegiate Swimming Association championship.

The Brighter Side...

Mr. Joe Turp writes:

Brooklyn, March 13.

Dear Sir: The other night my wife, Ethel, went to a movie alone and I was to meet her afterward and when I got to the theater she was standing in the lobby and the manager and two or three ushers were around and there was also a fat fellow there who was holding one hand to the side of his head and going Oh, Oh, Oh.

RUNYON

I ses to Ethel is there something wrong? The manager ses you bet your life there is something wrong. We have got a big mystery here and I am going to find out what it is if I have to call all the cops in Brooklyn in. The fat fellow ses Oh, Oh, Oh.

Ethel ses pay no attention to them Joe. The manager ses who are you Joe? I ses I am Joe Turp and this is my wife Ethel. The manager ses well Joe Turp your wife done something to this customer of mine here and I want to know what it was. The fat fellow ses Oh, Oh, Oh.

I ses Ethel what come off? She ses why Joe all I did was fix a lopper over. They are just making a fuss about nothing. I have often fixed lopper-overs Joe. I ses what on earth is a lopper-over Ethel? She ses why it is a fellow who keeps sort of lopping over on the one next to him in the movies if it is a pretty girl and he pretends it is by accident.

I ses you mean this fat guy was lopping over on you Ethel? She ses sure Joe that is why I fixed him. He was giving me that old lopping-over business all evening because he saw I was a pretty girl and alone. The manager ses you don't hate yourself do you Madam when you admit you are pretty? I ses what do you think about it brother? He ses, Oh, it is all right with me.

What's the Idea?

Ethel ses Joe you know some fellows lop over with their arms and some with their legs and some with their heads and this fellow was a head lopper over. He was letting his head lop over on my shoulder and pretending he was dozing off and it was by accident. I ses for goodness sakes Ethel what is the idea of anybody lopping over that way? She ses how do I know what the idea is? Fellows have been lopping over ever since I have been going to the movies.

I ses well what happened next? Ethel ses well Joe I stood it several times because once in a great while it may really be an accident but after about the third time I saw this fellow was just a lopper over on purpose. I would have changed my seat Joe but there were no other vacant ones so I fixed him. I stuck a pin up through the right shoulder of my coat from underneath and the next time he lopped over he stabbed himself in the head on the pin. Joe he yelled right out loud.

I ses I should think he would. I ses Ethel you might have hurt him pretty bad and she ses oh pooh Joe you use a short pin and there was no more danger of hurting him bad than of having my coat ruined by his greasy hair. You look at him Joe and see how greasy his hair is. He ran right up the aisle holding his head the same way he is doing now and got the manager and they have embarassed me by making a big row about nothing at all.

I ses oh so that was the way it was hay? I ses well just a minute Ethel while I speak to this lopper over fellow but the manager ses pardon me brother. I am first. I ses no this lady is my wife Ethel so that makes me first but all of a sudden the fellow ran right out of the lobby and up the street as fast as he could run and he was still going oh oh oh.

An Apology

I ses now mister manager how about you? The manager ses brother I owe you and your wife an apology but until you come along she would not tell what happened and the fellow himself did not know. All he knew was he had a terrible pain in the head and she ses she tried to kill him. If your wife had told me in the first place he was a lopper over I would have taken care of him myself.

I ses do you know about lopper overs too? The manager ses brother I know as much about them as if I was a dame. Ethel ses why Joe every girl that goes to the movies alone knows about the lopper overs. A lighted cigarette is good for them if you smoke cigarettes but of course I don't smoke.

I ses what do you mean a lighted cigarette is good for them? Ethel ses why you stick the lighted end against their legs and it makes them stop lopping over pretty quick. The manager ses madam would you be interested in a steady job in this theater taking care of those lopper overs? Ethel ses no because I am married and have my job looking after Joe. I know a girl who stomps her high heels on their toes. That is good too if they have corns.

I ses Ethel baby you come along and go home. I ses I will never again let you go to the movies alone. I ses I never knew you ran such risks and Ethel ses why Joe you need never worry about me. I am very experienced with those lopper overs and the manager ses madam will you permit me to tell you something else? Ethel ses sure and the manager ses you did not put it all in when you ses you ses you are a pretty girl. Madame to me you are beautiful.

Yours truly,

JOE TURP.

Easy Mark Captures Point-to-Point Race at Warrenton

Mary Barry 10 Lengths Behind

Trophy to Winner; Pair Race Captured By Nathalie Hazard And William Emory

By Anne Hagner.

Warrenton, Va., March 18.—Easy Mark, big chestnut gelding, owned and ridden by Gerald B. Webb, jr., proved himself tops over a field of nine horses at the Warrenton Hunt's point-to-point races, held today on the estate of Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, near here.

The 17-hand, 2-inch horse, given to Webb two years ago as a Christmas present, performed beautifully over the 5-mile, unflagged course and won by ten lengths in 15 minutes 2-5 seconds over Crompton Smith's good mare, Mary Barry, and Rack-a-Rock, owned by Amory Lawrence, all three members of the Middleburg Hunt.

Easy Mark saved nearly a quarter of a mile over his closest rivals by jumping two big fences and cutting diagonally across a field, while the rest of the entrants circled and lost ground.

Trophy to Winner

The winner, son of Hustle On-Cleopatra, carried 195 pounds and, in addition to the trophy for the open race, was awarded a bowl for being the first entrant to finish at over 190 pounds. He is the first horse to score such a double victory since the races were inaugurated six years ago. It was the second victory in a week for the tremendous chestnut, who scored in the heavyweight race at the Piedmont meeting last Saturday at Upperville.

Easy Mark won his race in 15 minutes 24 seconds, which beat last year's mark in the same event by 6 seconds, although this year's course was a little shorter. The winner was trained by Louis Duffey.

Crompton Smith's Mary Barry, who came in second, is a well-known point-to point winner, having annexed the Redland and Middleburg bowls two years ago. Since then, her racing career has been temporarily halted while she was in foal last spring.

Wins Pair Race

The pair race, second event on the card, was won by Nathalie Hazard on Protagonist and William Emory on Mrs. Amory Carhart's Dilate, who came in together in 19 minutes, 42 seconds. Second were the pair made up of Mrs. George Cutting on Snowy River and Mrs. Norman Toerge on Not So. Mrs. Toerge's daughter, Nancy Wedmon, came in third with Capt. R. J. Kirkpatrick, honorary secretary, of Warrenton. Eight pairs turned out for the race.

This point-to-point, unlike the others which have occurred during the early spring season, was over an unflagged course where, according to tradition, riders from the first hunt should be able to find their way better and faster than members of visiting hunt clubs. Yesterday, however, saw Middleburg Hunt representatives win three firsts, two seconds and one third over their Warrenton competitors.

Numerous Spills

Although racing conditions were ideal, many joined the ranks of the fallen. In the open race Lucie Duer came a cropper from her horse, Loops, but was unhurt. In the same event, Melville Church was running well with the leaders when he fell from his mare, Miss Raven, not far from the finish. Mildred Gaines suffered a few cuts on the face when her horse ran under a tree, but she was able to finish the course. The results:

OPEN RACE—Won by Easy Mark, owned and ridden by Gerald B. Webb, jr.; second, Mary Barry, owned and ridden by Crompton Smith; third, Rack-a-Rock, owned and ridden by Amory Lawrence. Those ran—Loops, Miss Lucie Duer; Miss Raven, Melville Church; Nemo, Capt. R. J. Kirkpatrick; War Captive, Mrs. R. C. Winmill; Whiz, John C. Hinckley; The Duchess, Miss Mildred Gaines.

PAIR RACE—Won by Miss Nathalie Hazard on Protagonist and William Emory on Dilate; second, Mrs. George Cutting on Snowy River and Mrs. Norman Toerge on Not So; third, Miss Nancy Redmon on Water Sprite and Capt. Kirkpatrick on Ballyhoo.

A Record-Breaking Tankman and Three Girl Champions

Y. M. C. A. Lad Breaks Marks in 50-Yard And 100-Yard Events

By Bill Burnett.

Karl Schmitt, a young Y. M. C. A. swimmer with a truck driver's shoulders and the ability to propel himself through the water at an uncommon rate of speed, registered a real record-shattering performance in the annual indoor D. C. A. A. U. swim meet last night at the Shoreham pool.

In the first event of the finals, before the crowd had time to settle itself, Schmitt turned in a 24.6 time for the 50-yard free style to break a 2-year-old District record by two-tenths of a second. Then, swimming in the 100-yard free style event, Schmitt performed the real feat of the evening when he shattered a flat 56-second District record by almost 2 seconds, his time being 54.1.

Schmitt's Y. M. C. A. team, despite his one-man performance, lost the men's team trophy to Shoreham team, the point totals of the latter being 51 compared to the "Y's" 43. Shoreham made a clean sweep of proceedings when its girls' team marked up 38 points against 29 for its bitterest rival, Ambassador girls.

The efforts of the Ambassador girls were especially brilliant in view of the fact that only three remained in the finals to compete with eight Shoreham lassies. And, of the three, Ann Arnson was the whole show. In four events, she came in first three times and second once. Her winning races were the 220-yard free style, the 100-yard free style and the 150-yard medley swim, in which she set a new mark of 1:15.8. She was second in the 50-yard free style.

Two of the night's finals held more than their share of thrills for galleryites. In the 220-yard breast stroke for men, Dick Baker, swimming for the Shoreham, led for most of the distance but was caught at the tape by Morris Goldberg, Y. M. C. A. entry. The latter's margin was a scant 2 inches.

Ann Arnson furnished the other high spot when she trailed a speedy field through the back and breaststrokes of the girls' 150-yard medley and won with a fast and furious stretch drive in the free style division.

50-YARD FREE STYLE (men)—Won by Schmitt (Y); second, Wright (S); third, Jordan (S). Time, 24.6 seconds.

50-YARD FREE STYLE (women)—Won by Brunson (S); second, Arnson (A); third, Steinbraker (A). Time, 32.3 seconds.

220-YARD BREAST STROKE (men)—Won by Goldberg (Y); second, Baker (S); third, Holden (W). Time, 3:11.8.

100-YARD BREAST STROKE (women)—Won by Kirsch (S); second, Brackett (S); third, Farwell (S). Time, 1:30.9.

220-YARD FREE STYLE (men)—Won by Wright (S); second, Swan (S); third, Boggs (Y). Time, 2:30.6.

220-YARD FREE STYLE (women)—Won by Arnson (A); second, Platt (S); third, Brunson (S). Time, 3:00.4.

150-YORD BACK STROKE (men)—Won by Boggs (Y); second, Bamman (C); third, Gray (W). Time, 1:46.3.

100-YARD BACK STROKE (women)—Won by Strobecker (S); second, Wadsworth (S); third, Steinbraker (A). Time, 1:19.8.

100-YARD FREE STYLE (men)—Won by Schmitt (Y); second, Wright (S); third, Jordan (S). Time, 54.1 seconds.

100-YARD FREE STYLE (women)—Won by A. Arnson (A); second, Brunson (S); third, H. Arnson (A). Time, 1:11.

Ortiz Beats Tigers, 4-3, in 1st Game of '39

Holds Foes Hitless for 3 Innings; Alexander, Welaj Star for Nats

right-hander's curve was not exactly baffling.

Alex Alexander, who opposed Hutchinson at the start of the game, confirmed the belief that he is some sort of a prize prospect. The Venezuelan pitched hitless ball for two innings and shut the Tigers out in the third also despite yielding a pair of singles. Until Hutchinson, himself, lifted a fly to the outfield in the third inning, no Tiger got a ball out of the infield against Alexander.

George Case greeted Hutchinson with a single to right, right off the bat, but a double play cut the Nats down in the first inning. And in the second inning they filled the bases on him before he retired Alexander for the third out. But in the fourth they reached him.

Buddy Myer drove a single to right center with one out, and it was the first of three consecutive Washington hits. Travis and Wasdell banged out singles, and the Nats' second run of the inning scored when Shortstop Frank Croucher booted Alexander's grounder.

The Tigers were presented their three-run fifth inning by Joe Haynes and Buddy Lewis. Haynes couldn't get the ball over the plate and Lewis couldn't pick up grounders. Haynes walked three hitters, forced in one run, and two muffs by Lewis figured in the other pair.

But Ortiz closed the doors on the Tigers almost immediately. He walked Walker in the second inning with one out and then disposed of Gebringer on a fly and Greenberg on a force-out. In the eighth he led off by walking Fleming, and then he committed a balk that put Fleming on second with none out. But he bent to his pitching and struck out Fox, and made Rogell and Parsons pop up.

Ortiz got himself into trouble in the ninth with one out, when he didn't known what to do with the Croucher's bunt, finally throwing it wide of first base. And then Croucher took second when Vernon, in tossing the ball back to Ortiz, threw it wild. But, on second, Croucher was stranded because Walker and Gehringer could only lift a pair of tame flies to center field.

Down In Front

With Richards Vidmer

The Iron Horse

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 18.—Of course, there are many observers who have been here in the Yankee camp much longer than I have. They have had more opportunities to watch the champions of the world at practice and at play and should know what they're talking about. But when the first one suggested that the Iron Horse was rusty, I must confess I paid little attention.

VIDMER

Why, it was a preposterous idea. Imagine Lou Gehrig, the backbone of the Yankees, lo, these many years, breaking down. Why, it seemed only yesterday, or the day before, perhaps, that he first came down to a Yankee training camp, a chunky, shy short of kid with a couple of dollars in his pockets and a straw suitcase containing an extra shirt and a toothbrush in his big bag. The only suit of clothes he owned was on his back.

And yet it must have been quite a time since that day, on second thought, for so many things have happened since. The shy, chunky lad has grown to be a fine, friendly man. He has married a lovely lady, built a comfortable home in New Rochelle, acquired the poise of an accomplished after-dinner speaker, and become a big figure in the biggest city in the world.

And the rather awkward, somewhat erratic recruit of that time became one of the greatest ball players of history. He has led the league in almost every phase of hitting, holding the batting championship once, total hits once, runs scored four times, total bases four times, runs batted in five times and home runs on three occasions. He has been named the most valuable player in the league, played in seven World's Series, and has played 14 consecutive seasons without missing a game.

Significant Signs

Yes, a lot of years have passed, and now they're saying that the Iron Horse is breaking down.

"There's no doubt about the rookies in camp," more than one observer has said. "Everyone knows they will come up to expectations. The real problem on this club is first base. Lou Gehrig is slipping fast."

Even some of the players, in moments of confidence, have shaken their heads and murmured that Lou didn't seem the same. Joe McCarthy has Tommy Henrich, an outfielder, practicing assiduously at first base. Paul Kritchell, the scout, speaks highly of the ability of Babe Dahlgren, a first baseman, who has been playing third in the absence of Red Rolfe. There are significant signs that the problem at first base is being viewed with alarm.

"Every year," he confessed with a grin, "it takes a little longer to get in shape. Every year it takes a little more work, a little more effort. This spring, realizing those things, I reported a week earlier than I ever did before. And I've been going about the task of strengthening my legs, getting the kinks out of my body, adjusting my batting eye more slowly than usual.

Voice of Experience

"I've been at this business a long, long time," he remarked. "I used to come down here to camp all fired up and impatient to get started. Sometimes I guess I tried too hard to get going quickly, with the result that I threw myself into a slump that stretched into the regular season. I used to be irritated and annoyed when I didn't start hitting home runs right off the reel. And I used to worry about it. But I've

Dodger Regulars Win

Clearwater, Fla., March 18 (AP).—Kemp Wicker was both the winning and losing pitcher in the Brooklyn Dodgers' four-inning practice game, as the regulars beat the Yannigans, 6-1. Tot Pressnell and Bill Crouch pitched the first inning and Paul Doyle and Wicker relieved them. Crouch complained of a lame arm and left after pitching to one batter. Wicker also took his place and gave up the winning runs, thus becoming the loser while he still was the pitcher of record for the winning side.

Dogs

By George Berner

Every dog owner has his own particular problems. The individual dog, the environment, the housing conditions and many other things have something to do with an owner's problems, but there are those which are common to most dogs.

BERNER.

Let's look at these most common dog "misdeeds" and see what can be done about them.

deeds" on our list is "car chasing" and without doubt it is the most deadly. Thousands of dogs are killed every year while chasing automobiles. The cure is quite sure and simple. Have a friend drive by the house when the dog is free to chase his car. Provide this friend with a few torpedoes, the type which explode when thrown on the pavement. When the dog chases the car the torpedo should be thrown as close to him as possible. It makes a loud noise and the small pebbles it contains sting Mr. Pooch aplenty. It hurts him a little, yes, but not nearly so much as a wheel running over his neck.

Here's a Cure

Another of the first three or four is the habit of jumping fences. Folks build runs or fence the yard, but friend dog hops over with ease. Some will climb, too, and it seems impossible to keep them in. Fasten a chain to the dog's collar about 4 feet long and on the loose end of the chain fasten a stick or block of wood. The size and weight of the stick will depend entirely on the size of the dog. It should be small and light enough so he can pull it around easily but heavy enough so he is well aware that it is there.

Many readers complain that their dogs will jump up on people in spite of all they can do. One subscriber recently wrote that although he whipped his dog it persisted in jumping on everyone who came to the house. This is a very annoying habit, but it is very easy to stop. When friend dog jumps on you, step on his toes (presuming his hind feet are on the ground) hard enough to hurt him just a little, but remember too the weight of your foot and the shoe you're wearing. Have a friend or two do the same thing and your troubles will be over. Some dogs get wise and will jump down almost immediately, expecting the toe treatment. If he does this, grasp his front legs and hold him there until you can treat him properly.

Drastic Methods

Tar, gum, etc, in the hair seems to be a constant worry, although we have printed directions for getting it out several times, queries continue to come in, so we must regard it as among the most important. Tar or gum or any simliar substance may be removed very quickly and easily by holding a piece of ice against it. The substance will become very hard and brittle and may be cracked or combed out.

Digging in the lawn, etc., seems to be responsible for some grey hairs among our readers and frankly this isn't so easy to stop. If the dog is well trained, a few hours of watching and admonishing when he starts digging will stop him. Most dogs aren't that easy to stop, however, and more drastic methods are necessary. When you see Mr. Mutt doing a mole act, rush out quickly, smack him where his trousers would be and then sprinkle a little pepper in the hole he has started. Don't fill it immediately, but leave it with the pepper in it. He will, of course, go back for a smell or two and when he finishes sneezing will be a smarter dog. A few

The Detroit team continued to show individual and collective superiority in the final events today.

Ryder Cup Match Site Announced

Sarasota, Fla., March 18 (AP).—The Professional Golfers Association, through its president, George Jacobs, today announced the Ponte Vedra Golf Club at Jacksonville, Fla., had been selected as the site of this year's Ryder Cup matches.

The dates for the British-United States competition have not been set, but will be sometime in November. Jacobs pointed out the topography of the Ponte Vedra seaside course is similar to English courses and should be favorable to the British team.

The United States team, captained by Walter Hagen, will defend the cup, as the result of beating the British in 1937 at Southport for the first win of either team on foreign soil. Hagen also was captain of the 1937 team.

Winner Gets Smart Ride From Meade

My Porter Beaten Out at Wire; Major B Takes Show Money; 10,000 Cheer Victor

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 18.—Under a perfectly judged ride by Don Meade, J. J. Watts' filly, Merry Gesture, trained by Mary Hirsch, today eked out a photo victory in the featured Clearwater purse while a crowd of 10,000 cheered lustily for the even money favorite. F. J. Buchanan's My Porter, closing with a belated rush on the inside, earned the place by a length and a half over J. B. Partridge's Major B.

Merry Gesture, recently a close second to Sugarage, which finished fifth in this race, lasted by a good head and completed the six furlongs in 1:12 flat. Seven three-year-olds clashed in the $1,200 event.

Only three more weeks of the sport remain on the Florida schedule. The Gables Association is enjoying its best meeting to date. It was a perfect afternoon for the large and colorful crowd and Merry Gesture's triumph was gratefully received by favorite players who suffered severe setbacks the previous afternoon.

Sugarage, Major B. and Handiboy shot out of the bunch to battle it out for the lead. Meade hustled Merry Gesture after the trio on the back stretch and succeeded in placing his mount second to Major B. after 2 furlongs had been covered. Sugarage and Handiboy found the pace too fast. Major B. held command into the stretch while carrying Merry Gesture wide. Meade urged the favorite to the front entering the last sixteenth and had to keep riding hard, for My Porter drove "out of the clouds" and was catching the winner at the end.

Coronado, a recent sprint winner, came right back to win the mile and a sixteenth sixth race under Don Meade, who made it two stratight scores. Jest Once trailed the winner by a length and a half while nosing out the favored Slave Song for runner-up honors. Coronado shot up from sixth to first position on the back stretch. He opened up a daylight lead disposing of Bullet B. The colt continued gamely when Jest Once and Slave Song staged their closing bids. Backers of the winner collected $16.30 for $2.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NESSUS, $23.10, $11.80, $7.70; MISTRALKIN, $8.30, $5.60; LEGERDEMAIN, $6.10.

NESSUS, under slight restraint in the early running, gained steadily on the outside after leaving the backstretch, shook off the leaders when straightened into the stretch, but was under vigorous pressure to withstand MISTRALKIN'S bid. The latter, going in improved form under good handling, made a game effort when the final issue came and was wearing the winner down at the end. LEGERDEMAIN, a keen factor the entire trip, took a brief lead on the stretch turn, but faltered in the final drive. MY WO secured clear passage throughout and wore STEEL KING down in the last stride. STEEL KING broke alertly, displayed good speed, but began to falter after going six furlongs.

EBLIS, away forwardly, raced LADDIE STONE into defeat rounding the turn, drew out entering the stretch and held CANDAR safe in the final drive. CANDAR broke in a tangle and was in tight quarters in the opening mile, responded gamely when clear, but could not reach the winner. GRAND LIGHT, on the inside until the stretch turn, swung around the leaders turning into the stretch and wore BLOOMER GIRL down in the last few strides. BLOOMER GIRL saved much ground rounding the turn and finished stoutly, but could not get up.

DIAVOLO CLIFF, outrun in the opening furlongs, gained rapidly while obtaining clear passage on the inside and drew out into a winning lead through the stretch to win in hand. AIRTIGHT broke a trifle slow, but gradually bettered his position along the inner rail and outlasted the others. WHIM WHAM broke forwardly, went in close attendance of the pace, but was carried wide by SHIPMADILLY on the stretch turn, and losing much ground, but came again to take third place in the final strides. SHIPMADILLY raced greenly.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SUNTIME, $8.80, $4.20, $3.60; PATSEY BEGONE, $4.10, $3.10; POSTERITY, $3.80.

SUNTIME, under steadying restraint in the early stages, moved up with determination between the leaders after leaving the backstretch, shook off PATSEY BEGONE at his leisure and won in hand. PATSEY BEGONE, quickest to begin, showed good speed and raced ISAIAH into defeat, drew out rounding the turn, but was no match for the winner when challenged. POSTERITY, prominent and under light restraint early, finished stoutly and wore ISAIAH down through the stretch. BASQUE finished stoutly under strong pressure. ISAIAH broke tardily, moved up rapidly on the inside in the opening quarter mile, but weakened in the final furlong.

MERRY GESTURE, well handled, bettered her position on the outside in the final three furlongs, drew out with a rush when straightened into the stretch, but faltered and just lasted long enough to withstand MY PORTER'S challenge. The latter, on the inside, was kept well up under vigorous pressure, responded courageously to punishment through the stretch and was rapidly wearing the winner down. MAJOR B. showed high speed and raced SUGARAGE into submission in the early running and continued with excellent courage in the final furlong, but hung right at the end. SUGARAGE rushed to the front and a keen factor all the way, faltered in the final drive.

CORONADO, eased back going to the first turn, followed the leaders under slight restraint the first half mile, moved up fast on the outside, raced BULLET B into defeat, saved ground entering the stretch and maintained his lead with determination under strong pressure. JEST ONCE broke tardily and a trailer in the early running, began to better her position on the extreme outside in the last three furlongs to wear SLAVE SONG down in the final drive. SLAVE SONG went forwardly under light restraint, saved ground turning into the stretch and made a bold bid, but hung in the closing strides. BUTTER, prominent contender while saving ground in the early running, was taken to the outside entering the stretch, closed with determination under pressure and wore GRIEWRACK down in the final drive. GRIEWRACK displayed good speed, raced OZARK into defeat early and drew out rounding the lower turn, but was unable to stave off the winner's challenge. BEAVER COUNTY worked his way up steadily, came to the outside in the last furlong and finished gamely, but could not overhaul the leaders. BOLD GENERAL closed a big gap.

CHATTERWRACK, in the thick of contention the entire trip, finished with good courage and outlasted GOLDFIN. The latter, rated off the pace until rounding the last turn, moved up gradually when placed to pressure, but could not overtake the leaders. THE WINK, prominent early, faltered in the stretch run.

Meglen, Hoya Fullback, Standout in 'Secret' Drill

W.-M. Eleven Riddled in Scrimmage

John Spencer Splits Indian Defense With Unerring Passes; Daniels Also Shines

By Jack Munhall.

Behind "closed gates" on the intramural field from which newspaper photographers were turned away, the Georgetown University football squad secretly participated in its first outside scrimmage of the spring training season yesterday, approximately 750 uninvited spectators watching a brisk workout with William and Mary College.

Hush, hush was the by-word as Head Coach Jack Hagerty and assistants Maurice (Mush) Dubofsky and George Murtagh drove the husky Hoyas at mid-season pace against an unusually big and strong Indian eleven.

The scrimmage was not conducted under regulation game rules, there being no kick-offs, downs nor goals but Georgetown, which is seeking its second successive undefeated season, was conceded a comfortable edge by the "fans."

Improved Running, Blocking

Though it is a scarcity of veteran linemen that most worries Hagerty, the G. U. mentor could hardly restrain his glee at the vastly improved running and blocking of Frank Meglen, a heretofore sub fullback whose chief drawback was slowness afoot.

While his brother Joe, an All-Eastern halfback choice at Georgetown in 1936, looked on, Frank ripped the heavy William and Mary forward wall to shreds and could have scored three or four touchdowns had points been desired. Used principally on fake spinner plays through the center and off tackle, the 200-pound junior showed exceptional speed and drive and seldom was halted short of a 5-yard gain.

Several Long Gains

Several times he was away, but on each occasion he pulled up short in the open field and returned the ball to the line of scrimmage.

Another youngster who continued to justify predictions last season that he would be difficult to exclude from the 1939 backfield was John Spencer, fleet, shifty ball-carrier and a potentially great passer.

It was Spencer who was splitting the Indians' tightly-drawn defense with unerring heaves, colloborating with the pile-driving Meglen to confuse the visitors with alternate ground and aerial attacks.

Two W. and M. Players Injured on Way Here

Bowling Green, Va., March 18 (AP).—Two William and Mary football players, Jimmy Howard, sophomore back, and Co-captain-elect Lloyd Phillips suffered slight injuries today when two automobiles collided a mile north of here.

Occupants of the other car were uninjured.

Howard and Phillips were treated at Mary Washington Hospital at Fredericksburg.

U. championship tournament moved eight games nearer the finals yesterday when 90, 105 and 120-pound fives battled to escape elimination during an afternoon of basketball at the Eastern High gymnasium. With the two side courts in use, the youngsters put up spirited battles and showed all the dash and fight of their older brothers.

It remained for a 90-pound class game to be the closest affair of the program. The Powell Boys Club was the winner by a 26-24 count over the Southeast Boys Club. The two teams battled at almost even terms for most of the way, with Powell clinging to a slight lead in the closing minutes. Fanning and Lambros did the best work for the winners. Other 90-pound clubs to advance were the Georgetown Boys Club and the Washington Boys Club Celtics.

The two 120-pound games proved thrillers, with Washington Boys Club downing Northeast, 18 to 14 and Bethesda-Chevy Chase topping Merrick Boys Club, 19 to 12.

In the 105-pound class, Police Boys Club defeated St. Mary's, 28-24; Merrick stopped Georgetown, 27-17 and Bethesda turned back Y. M. C. A., 26 to 4.

Baering Down

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer.

There's a lot of bad feeling in this world and it's as mutual as ham nad beans. It starts with those peace conferences where they think up a lot of things they won't do to each other.

One country says to another country, "I won't do this to you if you won't do that to me." Then they both go out and do them.

Talk makes arguments and arguments make trouble. And when you're signing a treaty you are ear-marking a grudge.

Alexandria Boys Club Tops Georgetown, 26-25

Leon Chisholm's basket in the extra period last night gave Alexandria Boys Club a 26-25 uphill victory over Georgetown Boys Club in a 120-pound class thriller in the Post-A. A. U. basketball tournament.

Chisholm's shot overcame a one-point advantage the losers had held gained on Fred Pettitt's free throw at the start of the overtime session.

Alexandria came from behind to tie the score in the last 20 seconds of regulation time. Marty Foltz's foul shot deadlocked the count at 25-25.

Previously, Georgetown had the whip hand most of the way, although never more than five points separated the evenly matched foes. Biggest advantage either held was the 17-12 lead of Georgetown in the third quarter. At half the score favored the losers, 12-10.

Hyattsville Girls Win Over Grays by 32-10

Hyattsville girls had a comparatively easy time eliminating the veteran United Typewriter Grays from further titular consideration by winning a 32-10 decision. The youthful victors were too fast and aggressive for their opponents.

Joy Jones and Isabel Butler led the first half attack as Hyattsville rolled up an 18-4 lead. Their mates continued the blistering pace in the second half, and succeeded in landing the winners in the semi-finals.

Interior and Greenbelt Fives Clash Tomorrow in Tournament

Indians Play in Game at Eastern Gym; E. M. S. and Merrick B. C. on Program

Interior Department will stack its crack court combination, which includes several Indians, against the basketball representatives of Greenbelt, Md., the last survivor of the suburban teams in the unlimited class, tomorrow night in a second-round battle that will feature a four-game schedule in the Post-A. A. U. championship tournament at the Eastern High gymnasium.

In a 145-pound contest that should sparkle, the Epsilon Mu Sigma five, upset winner over Chevy Chase A. C. last week, will meet the formidable Merrick Boys Club. The tournament committee found it necessary to put this game in place of the scheduled Regal Clothiers-Army Medicos clash when the soldiers finished in a triple tie for the U. S. Government League title and must meet Marine Barracks tomorrow.

Two other 145-pound struggles are on the Wash Night card. The Powell Community Center will tackle the Arlington A. A. while Regal Neon makes its tournament rebut against the St. Mary's Boys Club of Alexandria.

Promising Battle

The clash of Interior and Greenbelt should make the Eastern gym fairly hum with action. Interior turned in a fine exhibition in the first round, downing the General Accounting team from the Post Office by a 44-21 margin. Greenbelt, with Johnny Bozek, former Gonzaga High and Georgetown University star, leading the attack, eliminated the formidable McLean A. C.

The Interior team is one of the most colorful in the tournament. Paul Ray, Edmond Cornelius, Elwood Harder and Ironteeth are the Indian members of the squad and are excellent players. Harder is the chief of the Winneabago Tribe of Nevada but on the court he is a strong, hard-playing guard. Greenbelt, from the Maryland community, is composed of former Washington stars and all members are married men. Bozek, a sensation when in local high school ranks, has been drilling the club for a serious bid at the District title and Greenbelt rooters are confident the team can hurdle Interior. The winner tomorrow night will

Silva Pointing for K.O. Over Galiano

Pair Tangle In 10-Round Main Bout

Coast Lightweight Fighter Looks Good in Workout at D.C. Gym On Arrival Here

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Mexican Joe Silva, bistra-colored boxer who tangles with Pete Galiano tomorrow night at Turner's Arena, arrived in town yesterday, stepped into ring togs and in the slightly broken accent of a native of Los Angeles promised to kick hell out of the Baltimore Italian.

Sound of wind and limb—apparently, chock full of Manager Jack Laken's confidence, Silva scowled viciously at the heavy bag then turned to inquire:

"Who ees theese Gallento, anyhow?"

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn judiciously interpretated this as a challenge to Leo Rodak, the N. B. A.'s No. 1 ranking featherweight, and forthwith ordered his minister of propaganda to make a note of Silva's savage disposition.

"Mek it strong, like garlic," he commanded.

"Funny guy, this Silva," interposed Manager Jack Laken. "Always wants to know who he's fighting, and how much he's getting. But that's a fighter for you. I tell 'im who he's fighting, though."

Powerful Right

Silva turned his attention to the big bag, still scowling and snorting like a bull. He aimed a right hook at Herr Ahearn's jaw and smacked the bag on its trade mark. He stepped back gingerly, surveyed the damage with a pleasant satisfied expression, and uncorked a left hook at Manager Laken. It was another bull's-eye.

He looked pretty cute, in old ring ring parlance—looking one way and lashing out with his fists in the opposite direction.

"A cutie, eh?" we inquired.

"Yes, and then, again, no," said Laken, mopping the perspiration from his gladiator's feverish brow with a grayish towel. "Them eyes are responsible for much of his success in the ring. He's cross-eyed, y' know."

We didn't know, but satisfied our curiosity with a good look at Silva, 10 paces to his right. He was looking us square in the eye. It felt a little chilly.

Shakes Opponent's Confidence

"He's so cross-eyed he can make faces at himself without a mirror," Laken continued. "And when he gets in that ring the opposition never knows what he's watching or where he's gonna strike next. He shakes their confidence with those eyes, and shakes their carcass with that right, how's that?"

Silva by this time was giving the bag a terrific lacing, but still aiming his punches at innocent bystanders. His fighting stare has more curve than Lefty Gomez's fadeaway. He gives you a look that skims over your left ear, does setting-up exercises behind your back, winds around the right ear and hits you plumb in the cornea.

"Who ees theese Galiento, anyhow," he demanded, hardly drawing a dozen deep breaths?

"He a pretty good fighter," Herr Ahearn volunteered hopefully, "And you'd better be ready for a tough fight."

"He'll take 'im like you grab for a "C" note," said Laken, "Won't you, Joey?"

"Who me," asked Silva with an alarmed expression?

Official Huddle

At this juncture Herr Ahearn's minister of propaganda dashed into the gym in a high state of dither—or maybe that's wither. The general staff went into an official huddle, from which Generalissmo Ahearn emerged with the startling news that Galiano it was reported, did not like Mexicans.

"Huh," grunted Silva, "Mee too, neither."

A hasty search of the minister of propaganda revealed a supporting card hidden on his person. The charges were:

Frankie Wills vs. Eddie Finazzo, six round semi-final; Dixie Cornbred vs. Battling Zuzu, four rounds; Johnny Pickeral vs. Billy Savage, four rounds; and Pee Wee Franklin vs. Billy Hatcher, four rounds.

Dogs

such treatments usually suffice.

Running away is another misdemeanor which may be stopped by using the same treatment as for fence jumping except that the anchor or block of wood should be heavier, just light enough so he can pull it with some effort.

These finicky eaters are expensive and bothersome. "My dog won't eat anything but raw meat" —"My dog won't eat dry dog food," etc., etc. Every mail has its share of these. Your dog should eat anything edible that you set in front of him and will if you refrain from over-feeding it at all times. Never substitute a different food for the one he has refused. When he goes high-hat, pick up his dish and don't offer him anything to eat until the next day at about the same time. If he still sticks his nose up at it, take it up and offer him the same thing the next day. Keep him away from kindhearted neighbors and garbage cans and he will seldom go longer than the second day. Don't worry about him starving, when he gets hungry enough he'll eat it.

Q. Is there any preparation which will keep ticks off a dog?

A. We have never found it if there is. We have heard that a new product called Tix Tox is effective.

Q. In your opinion is it wise to take a dog from the dog pound into a home where there are children?

A. Absolutely not. Nothing can be known of their characters, dispositions or, for that matter, anything else about them. In our opinion it would be far better if, after an attempt was made to locate the owner, the dog remained unclaimed after a number of days, to put him to sleep.

Q. My dog chases my neighbor's cat when I am not around, never when I am. The owner of the cat tells me that there is something I can get to feed my dog which will stop him from chasing cats. Is this true and if so, what is it?

A. Holy sailors, that's a new one. We've heard of the lady who fed her cat bird seed so it wouldn't catch the birds, but that didn't work. Your neighbor probably has arsenic or some like substance in mind which will stop your dog from doing anything and everything. Better watch her.

Chester Morris Makes Debut In A.A.U. Ring Tourney

Fights Bob Nolan at Turners Arena Wednesday Night in Semifinal Round

Big Chester Morris, massive mauler who would wear the District amateur heavyweight crown, will strike his first blow for recognition Wednesday night at Turner's Arena where the annual A. A. U. tournament winds into the fourth and semifinal week of competition.

A stablemate of the highly regarded Jimmy DeChard, Morris makes his tournament debut against Bob Nolan, National Guard representative, in the final of a 16-bout program, and all omens point to a Morris victory.

Content, heretofore, to remain in the background while the popular DeChard was pushed to the fore, Morris is ready to step out and make a name for himself as a pugilist. Morris had been training faithfully at Frankie Mann's gymnasium, and is in excellent condition. He won by a knockout in the inter-city match with Richmond last month, and is confident of disposing of Nolan, and all future opponents, in the same decisive manner.

Promising Youngster

Morris is but one of the many promising youngsters scheduled to appear on the star-studded card. Tom Beardsley, the one man Terrapin A. C., opposes Al Gray, veteran Merrick Club fisticuffer, in a 135-pound novice class bout. Billy Colbert, ambitious young Washington Boys Club featherweight, will try to halt the victorious march of rugged Bernie Morris, Georgetown Boys Club ace, in another novice bout, while Mike Blaso, Merrick, Bob Bradigan, Pete's A. C., and Bill Lanasa, Fort Myer, all novices, are scheduled to display their wares.

Jim Brady, Georgetown University light-heavyweight, who was prevented from appearing in New York last week because of a heavy cold, will be ready for his duel with George Galvin, of Fort Myer, and anticipates a rough evening. Billy Kekeris, whose style is patterened after that of Steve Mamakos, and who punches better than the durable Greek professional, tangles with Clyde Hayes, a formidable opponent, in the 147-pound senior class.

Plenty of Action

There will be plenty of action in the 160-pound class, which had only a single entrant last year, with two bouts scheduled, one having the defending champion, Jim Perrow, pitted against Bill Malgrave, of Merrick. Tony DeToto, Police No. 5 lightweight, and George Ryan, Fort Myer light-heavyweight, are among those scheduled to appear, and it all adds up to a promising evening.

Novice Semi-Finals

126 POUNDS—Bob Bradigan (Pete's A. C.) vs. William Lanasa (Ft. Myer); Billy Colbert (W. B. C.) vs. Bernie Morris (G. B. C.).

135 POUNDS—Mike Blaso (Merrick) vs. John Carroll (Merrick); Tom Beardsley (Terrapin A. C.) s. Al Gray (Merrick).

Open Class

147 POUNDS—Eddie Alexander (G. B. C.) vs. John Mancini (Pete's A. C.); Nick Mancini (Pete's A. C.) vs. Howard Blaskin (Unat.).

Babe Zaharias, Bibber McCoy Are Rematched

Principals of Last Week's Roughhouse To Head Mat Card

Encouraged by their riot-inciting antics in last week's semi-final, Promoter Joe Turner is re-importing Babe Zaharias and Bibber McCoy for this week's mat card at the Arena. They will be turned loose in a 90-minute engagement—no holds barred.

Last week's match between the two was a classic, winding up with the usual display of bare knuckles, brass buttons (worn by gendarmes), and temper (by McCoy and his adherents). McCoy immediately lodged a complaint against Bortnick's of-McCoy succeeded in wrestling Zaharias to the carpet and pinning ficiating, claiming to have been robbed, and more than one customer agreed with him and offered to substantiate his story.

Bibber, it seems, made a dive for Zaharias—missed, but hit Referee Bortnick, knocking him from the enclosure. While Bennah was reclining on the cold, cold concrete, riding herd on a flock of sheep, missed all that.

him for a 12-count. But Bortnick

When the watermelon king collected his scattered senses, and clambered back into the ring, McCoy was doing an Irish jig—celebrating his victory. At precisely that moment—as if by pre-arrangement, Zaharias uncorked a right hand punch from the rear, rendering McCoy temporarily hors d' combat. Bortnick promptly counted him out.

McCoy contends it's the second time Bortnick has wandered off the beat when he had a man down, and he's surfeited with Benny's work. He'll have no more of it, and has demanded a new referee for this week's struggle.

Ambers, Day Get Title Shots At Armstrong

By the United Press.

New York, March 18.—Little Henry Armstrong, the human buzzsaw from Los Angeles, today signed for two title defenses against a pair of the toughest men in the leatherpushing industry.

On March 31 he steps into Madison Square Garden ring with the welterweight crown at stake against Davey Day, of Chicago, and on August 9 Henry will climb between the ropes at Yankee Stadium and give Lou Ambers, of Herkimer, N. Y., a chance to regain the lightweight title yielded to the Los Angeles Negro last August.

The wise men of Cauliflower alley were saying tonight that if Henry gets through those two scraps with the crowns still setting on his brow then he deserves to go down as one of the greatest fighting machines of all times.

The matches were closed in the offices of the New York State Athletic Commission with Day and his manager, Sam Pian, appearing in person, and Armstrong, represented by Manager Eddie Meade, and Ambers, his pilot, Pudgy Al Weill.

Day, a 27-year-old veteran, who used to be a stablemate of Barney Ross, agreed to scale 138 pounds or more for his shot at Henry. That is to prevent him from winning two titles which he would do if he scaled 135 and licked Henry.

Amstrong, who won the welterweight crown from Ross last May and the lightweight from Ambers three months later, agreed not to defend the latter title before he steps into the standium ring against Lou in August.

Henry has defended the welter title five times since he won it, but he only put the lightweight crown on the line once. That was the other night in St. Louis, when he had both championships at stake and knocked out Lou Feldman, of New York, in one round.

move up into the quarter-finals to meet the winner of the Wednesday clash of Regal Clothers and Army Medicos.

The first quarter-final game of the unlimited class is booked for Tuesday night. W. W. Chambers meets Dapper Dan and the fur should fly. On the same program, Delaware and Hudson, which narrowly escaped elimination by a surprising Merrick Boys Club five last Friday night, attempts to get by the Stouffer's Park and Dine team. Stouffer's line-up smacks of American University and it hung a defeat on Fort Washington last week.

Dapper Dan will be making it last appearance before meeting the New Mexico Aggies, sensational college team, in a game that is likely to be played next Thursday night at the Tech High gymnasium. The Aggies are playing Roanoke College's "Five Smart Boys" tomorrow night in Madison Square Garden.

Wisconsin Star Sets Pole Vault Mark

Indianapolis, March 18 (AP).—Milt Padway, of Wisconsin, cracked the world's indoor relays tonight with a towering leap of 14 feet ⅝ inch. The old mark of 13 feet 7¾ inches was set by Tommy Warne, of Northwestern, in 1929.

Girls' Cage Tourney

Wichita, Kans., March 18 (I.N.S.) Play begins Monday in the Women's National A. A. U. Basketball tourney, with 24 teams from 13 States scheduled to compete. The tournament will end next Saturday.

Hyatt's Quintet Scores Twice In Tournament

Chalking up two decisive victories in the opening day's play, Hyatt's All Stars, of Pittsburgh, stamped themselves as the outstanding contender for the Middle-Atlantic crown, in the two-day tournament which opened yesterday at Heurich gym. The Smoky City quintet outclassed Hot Shoppes, 40-24, in its initial engagement, and followed up with a 44-25 victory over the Dapper Dans.

Play will be resumed this morning at 10 o'clock, when the strong Bethlehem Steel five, of Baltimore, engages Philadelphia's Pearson's A. A., which established itself as a title threat by winning handily over St. Martin's last night. Last night's results:

N. C. Bowlers Set Pace in U. S. Tourney

Charlotte Teams Lead In Both Men's and Women's Divisions

Charlotte, North Carolina, bowlers took the lead in both men's and women's singles in the championship class while Joe Joseph forged ahead in the men's all-events in the National Duckpin Bowling Congress tournament last night at Lucky Strike Alleys.

Joseph, Charlotte city champion, totalled 1,173 for the doubles, singles and team rolling to lead Buck Harvey, Baltimore, by three pins. Joseph had 373 in the doubles and 360 in the singles and then finished with a powerful 440 set with his team from a 154 and two 143s, to take the lead. Harvey, who had finished a few minutes sooner, had 400 in the singles and 410 in the doubles but a final 102 game with his team hurt his chances of pacing the important division.

Forge Into Lead

Charlotte Bowling Center's quintet, led by Joseph's 440 and a 395 by W. Simpson, forged ahead with 1,861. Other championship class teams rolling included Bismark Beer, Baltimore, with 1,762, Pilot Full Fashioned Mills, Valdese, North Carolina, 1,691 and Duponts of Richmond, 1,748.

Alloys Liquor Store of this city went ahead among the men's booster teams with 1,724, led by G. Hummer's 384. Other local booster scores included Agriculture, 1,612, and Washington Beef and Provision, 1,628.

Women booster combinations were paced by Recreation Center, Portsmouth, Va., with 1,557, ahead of Shamrock-New Recreation, Washington, one pin less. They are well ahead of the previous leaders, Annapolis Hotel.

Leads Men's Singles

Charlotte girls' championship teams, champions two years ago, finished with 1,616, led by L. Bradshaw's 358, and T. Johnson's 337.

Harvey's 400 took the lead among the men's singles scores, while the male duos have a new leader in Harvey and Charley Pace, Baltimore, with 743.

The remainder of the men's and women's singles scores were not high enough to rank among the leaders.

The first entrants among the youngsters rolled, singles with Julian Black, North Carolina, totaling 286 in the boys' play, 15 years and under, and Gilbert Brandon, South Carolina, 288.

Astor Clarke, Zimmerman Win Doubles

Astor Clarke, the Nation's No. 1 duckpin artist, in the throes of a tournament slump over most of the season, paired with one of Baltimore's top women bowlers, Naomi Zimmerman, to win the St. Patrick's Day Mixed Doubles Tournament last night at Silver Spring Alleys with a 2,529 total for the 10 games.

A record field of 59 teams, including the cream of the crop from this sector and a sprinklig of out-of-town stars, competed in the event, originated by Earl Stocking six years ago, for prize money of $405.

Clarke cracked the pins for a powerful 708 set in the afternoon block while his partner contributed a satisfactory 595, and then the Rosslyn ace came through with 636 in the final block, with his partner dropping five pins to 590. Their total of 2,529 was ahead all the way and paced the field by 118 pins. Clarke's 1,344 easily led the male contingent.

Richmond's top duo of Helen Randlett and George Demeres took second money of $70, compared to first prize of $120, with 2,411, Mrs. Randlett's spare in the final box enabling them to finish four sticks ahead of Caroline Hiser, Rosslyn, and Ed Blakeney, leading money winner of the year. Mrs. Randlett had 537-571, while Demeres' was 683.620.

Blakeney counted 1,267 for the 10 games, while Miss Hiser was well up among the women's scores with 1,140. Their share of the money was $50.

The Rosslyn duo of Blanche Wootton and Galt Davis took fourth prize of $40 on the strength of Miss Wootton's 1,227 total, that was tops among the women entrants. Davis had 1,172, and they counted 2,399 for the route.

The Baltimore combination of Audrey Mullaney and Russ Askew had 2,396 for fifth prize of $30, while Ida Simmons, Norfolk's queen of the women's duckpin domain, and her partner, Chubby McNew, National all-events champion last year, completed the regulation prize winners with 2,285 for $25. Miss Simmons had 1,138.

High game and block prizes of $15 found Jean White and Ray Wright's game in the first block and Violet Bechtold and Howard Parson's 286 in the second block as winners. Parsons won the event with a record score, with Evelyn Ellis three years ago.

learned a lot in the years I've been around."

The last remark reminded me of the old days when both Lou and I were younger. He had a lot to learn then. He made some mistakes almost every day, but patient little Miller Huggins had tremendous faith and confidence in the big, hard hitting first baseman.

"Of course he makes mistakes," the little manager used to say. "But he never makes the same mistakes twice. He just has a lot more to learn than a lot of ball players."

And it seems that Gehrig learned it all. Including patience in the training camp; patience and understanding when he failed to start off with a bang and a burst of hitting. Now he is quite content to take his training slowly and easily, letting the tears that fall for his apparent passing splatter where they may.

Cardenas Note Clouds Status Of Oil Talks

Hints at Agreement But Discusses Plans For Further Parleys

By the United Press.

Mexico City, March 18.—President Lazaro Cardenas tonight issued an ambiguously worded statement which indicated in some paragraphs an agreement had been reached, but in others referred only to what the Mexican government proposes to do in the controversy over the expropriation of foreign oil properties.

Donald R. Richberg, representing the American and British interests in the controversy warned last Friday that no agreement should be considered reached until it was signed jointly by him and President Cardenas.

The statement said:

"The government of Mexico has manifested since the decree expropriating the petroleum company properties, that it had the firm intention of justly indemnifying the companies.

"Later it also manifested its desire to reach an understanding and was seeking a form to satisfy the interest of the companies, protecting, above all, the interests of the nation.

"The companies recently designated Donald R. Richberg as their authorized representative before the Mexican government. The said representative proposed a plan of collaboration between the government and companies for development of the petroleum industry. Companies would contribute toward formation of a corporation both the amount equivalent to indemnification for properties expropriated, as well as new amounts which they are disposed to invest.

"In the projected plan of collaboration the government will exercise, by means of its respective departments, the directive functions and the administration, conceding to companies representation in proportion to investment they make, investments which will be of a smaller quantity than investments of the government itself.

"Once the companies accept the principles and bases proposed by the Mexican government for the duration of the plan of collaboration . . . the fixing of percentages remain for the study of technicians who will be designated by the interested parties."

Police Believe Hit-Run Auto Killed Soldier

Slaying Theory Now Discounted in Prince Georges Death

Investigators expressed the opinion last night that Sergt. Edman C. Garrett, 37, of Fort Washington, whose body was found yesterday on the bank of a road, was killed by an automobile, probably a hit-and-run machine.

That was the opinion of Chief Arthur Hepburn, of the Prince Georges County police force, and also of Maj. G. A. Jackson, head of the Fort Washington board of inquiry. An autopsy will be performed at Walter Reed Hospital this morning.

Sergt. Garrett's body was found alongside the Livingston road, between the District line and Oxon Hill. It was first believed he had been murdered.

Hepburn, however, pointed out that the soldier's face had been mashed and his skull split. He had bought a bottle of liquor at Oxon Hill, the investigation showed. Hepburn believes he was walking on the left side of the road, facing traffic, when he was struck. The impact, he said, ripped out the brass rings of his button holes.

Maj. Jackson said he could uncover no motive to support the murder theory. Sergt. Garrett, he said, was last paid March 1, and could not have had much money.

Sergt. Garrett, attached to the Third Battalion, Twelfth Infantry, was popular at Fort Washington. A native of East Lynn, W. Va., he had been in the Army for 11 years. Unmarried, he leaves a sister, Mrs. Mabel Tyree, of De Soto City, Fla.

Four Soldiers Held For Robbery of Filling Station

Four Fort Myer soldiers and a taxicab driver were being held by the police last night, in connection with the holdup of a gasoline station early yesterday.

The men admit the $11-robbery of eGorge W. Anderson, night manager of the station at 1700 Benning road northeast, the police say, and Anderson identified them.

Detective Sergt. Robert J. Barrett caused the arrest of the four soldiers on information obtained from the cab driver. They were arrested by military police and turned over to Barrett after Anderson's identification.

Barrett said the men will be held for investigation in connection with several similar holdups here in the past few weeks.

Three Forest Firefighters to Get Medals

1st Awards of This Class to Be Given at Dinner Wednesday

Three outstanding forest fire fighters will receive the first medals for heroism in action from the American Forestry Foundation at a dinner in the Mayflower Wednesday. High ranking Government officials will be present to assist in launching a Nation-wide campaign for greater public participation in forest fire prevention. Names of the men to be honored have not been announced.

A painting of forest trees being destroyed in flames will be unveiled at the dinner by James Montgomery Flagg, celebrated artist. More than a million posters are to be made from the canvas for distribution throughout the Nation.

At the headquarters of the American Forestry Association it was pointed out yesterday that despite greatly increased expenditures for their suppression, fires continue to destroy 36,000,000 acres a year. Carelessness of millions of summer vacationists is major cause of the catastrophe. The campaign to be launched Wednesday for greater public co-operation in fire prevention will be aided by Federal and State governments and independent agencies.

Czech Conquest Paves Way for Ruthless Nazi Drive to the East

Hitler May Re-Create Old Empire

But Slavs Will Resist Him Just as They Resisted Austro-Hungarian Monarchy

By John Bertram Oakes.

Clio, the muse of history, must be indulging in a long, quiet laugh.

For Clio knows what Adolf Hitler has overlooked—that the most glittering empire of Europe plunged to its destruction but 20 years ago because it had never succeeded in stamping out the flames of independence that brightened the spirit and hardened the will of every one of its subject peoples.

It was the great war that gave a golden opportunity to the Slavs of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, a golden opportunity to plunge a dagger into the heart of their erstwhile rulers. Czechs and Slovaks, South Slavs and Ruthenians deserted by the hundred thousand from the Austrian armies, formed their own divisions with the Allied troops and fought bitterly for the freedom of their homelands.

Of all the Slavonic groups that helped send the Austro-Hungarian Empire hurtling into history, the Czechs of Bohemia and Moravia were the most advanced politically, culturally, economically. In fact, there had been a time when the kingdom of Bohemia was one of the brightest jewels in the Hapsburg crown.

The jewel lost some of its lustre, however, with the merciless religious struggles of the seventeenth century. It was in the capital of Bohemia, on a spring day in 1618, that the Thirty Years' War is popularly said to have begun with the famous defenestration of Prague, when two Catholic leaders were tossed out of the castle window and into a moat.

Led by the Bohemian aristocracy, the Czechs established a revolutionary government which was speedily overwhelmed by the Hapsburgs in the Battle of the White Mountain, considered by all patriotic Czechs as the beginning of their decline. So thorough were the Hapsburg reprisals that the Czech nobility was destroyed and "Czech became a language spoken only by peasants and workmen."

It was not until the nineteenth century that the Czech revival began under the stimulus of a nationalistic fervor that swept over all of Europe as an outgrowth of the Napoleonic wars. Fired by a new spirit, the Czechs reawoke as a people and in 1848, "year of revolutions," arose, only to be suppressed.

Kept National Unity Despite Oppression

For the succeeding half-century, the Czechs and their fellow-Slavs in other parts of the empire were continuously in a state of unrest; even the granting of a certain amount of autonomy, embodied in a Diet at Prague, never fully satisfied them.

For 300 years, then, the Czechs had been dominated in their own historic homeland by the Austro-German ruler; while the Slovaks had been so utterly subjected by the Magyars that the latter used to say "a Slovak is not a human being."

And yet, despite a brutal history of oppression and slavery, it was these selfsame "bestial" Slavs who were able to maintain their national unity through the centuries and to fight and die for independence when the opportunity arose.

This is the people whose freedom Adolf Hitler would destroy. And it may be that this is the people by whom Hitler will be destroyed. Clio is a girl with a broad streak of irony.

EVEN ON THE assumption that the Nazi government is guided by a set of principles, it was contrary to every Nazi principle that the 7,500,000 Czechs of Bohemia and Moravia should be included within the territorial confines of the German Reich.

At the very basis of Nazi philosophy was the principle of "race," and the official excuse for many a Nazi crime lies in the necessity for safeguarding German blood to preserve (or create) that mystical nonsense known as "Aryanism."

That Hitler has abandoned his racial theories is obviously absurd; and the only conclusion that can be drawn from his fantastic action in respect to the helpless truncated remnant of the Czecho-Slovak Republic is that, like other empire-builders, he has committed the unpardonable folly of thinking himself invincible.

Other Moves Had Some Justification

Heretofore, every important move that Hitler has made in the sphere of foreign relations has had some element—greater or less—of justification. Many observers, disgusted with the belligerent bluster of the Nazis, nevertheless, were forced to admit that much of the original blame lay with the victors of Versailles.

The allied nations had a magnificent opportunity after the war to right the wrongs inflicted on the German Reich in 1919; but, sad to say, it appeared that only material force could move them. The Nazis had a very real grievance in respect to the Rhineland and Austria; although only acceptance of the Nazi principle of supernationalism can justify the violation of ancient frontiers and for the seizue of the Sudetenland. Aside from that, many foreigners believe that Nazi agitation for the return of the prewar colones has considerable merit.

But neither on racial or nationalistic or historical grounds can this week's destruction of Czecho-Slovakia be explained. A bloc of "servile Slavs," a subject race, has been seized and included within the Reich!

True enough, Slovakia declared its independence and—because its leaders are either incredibly myopic or easily corrupted—placed itself in Hitler's hands. Obviously, that move was inspired by the Nazis no less than was the overt invasion of Bohemia and Moravia.

Not only has Hitler double-crossed the trusting governments of Great Britain and France; he has double-crossed his own sheeplike followers by adding to the German realm an alien people who will unceasingly be a source of discontent, unrest and revolt just as they were in the days of the Hapsburg monarchy.

BEING AN irresponsible neurotic, Hitler can hardly be understood by rational statesmen, as was evident to any radio listener fortunate enough to hear Prime Minister Chamberlain's Birmingham address on Friday. It is well recognized, now that the Fuehrer has committed this latest action, that he cannot be reasoned with in the interests of European peace.

Unquestionably, he realized that the cold-blooded conquest of a helpless alien people would awaken a resentment and a fear among other nations quite different from that aroused in previous coups de main. Why, then, was he willing to run this risk?

Ever since the armistice of Munich, the Czecho-Slovak republic has, of course, been utterly at the mercy of the German Reich. Because, in annexing the Sudetenland, Germany annexed Czecho-Slovakia's well-fortified line of defense, the republic no longer could be considered a source of military danger to its western neighbor.

Conversely, Germany so completely dominated the country, virtually directing its foreign policy, that actual territorial annexation of Czecho-Slovakia seemed hardly necessary to bend it to German will. Furthermore, in case of an eastward German push to Hungary and Rumania, it is certain that no resistance would have been offered by a post-Munich "independent" Czecho-Slovakia.

However, Germany has obtained valuable loot in the form of material. Equipment for an army of some 1,500,000 men, including well over 1,000 planes and 200 tanks and vast stores of other armaments, will accrue to the conqueror.

Germany Makes Economic Gains

From an economic standpoint, Germany has undoubtedly made gains in adding some 38,000 square miles (about the area of Kentucky) and perhaps 10,000,000 Czechs and Slovaks, some of whom will doubtless be permitted to help supply the Reich's labor shortage. While the acquisition of the Sudetenland represents no great net economic gain for Germany, the addition of the whole of Czecho-Slovakia (except for the Ruthenian tail) means that Germany now has full possession of important arms factories and, even more important, extensive agricultural lands.

The economy of the former republic was fairly well balanced, so that by absorbing it in entirety it is unlikely that any further strain will be placed on the German foreign exchange situation. On the contrary, there is a quite definite immediate gain from the theft of Czecho gold reserves. It may well be that the serious financial state in which the Reich finds itself has prompted the seizure of Czecho-Slovakia for what it was worth. If so, it is apparent that, at best, such an advantage will be merely temporary.

But neither the immediate military nor the economic reasons are compelling enough of themselves to explain this complete reversal of expressed Nazi policy. Czecho-Slovakia was already in German hands in everything but name; but now the Nazis have gone out of their way to erase the name.

In other words, whether or not the Germans wiped out the territorial integrity of Czech-Slovakia was essentially unimportant from an economic view and also from a military standpoint. Unless, of course, the German drive to the East is going to take a new form of actual conquest of land as well as markets.

New Nazi Goal —Annexation

And that seems to be, more definitely than ever, the goal of Hitlerian ambition. Heretofore, many observers have believed that overt German imperialism in Europe would be limited to economic penetration, which would, of course, pave the way for internal Nazification of the various states. Germany even now dominates the trade of practically all the Balkan nations; a German boycott of Hungarian, Rumanian, Bulgarian or Greek exports would in a few months seriously damage those countries. With the stranglehold thus obtained, it has been fairly easy to exert pressure on their internal political structure.

Germany had that sort of control over Czecho-Slovakia, with the added advantage of surrounding that unfortunate country on three sides, thus enabling the Nazis to cut off practically all Czech foreign trade merely by raising the rail rates to Hamburg or Trieste.

But now it appears that mere economic conquest is not enough. What was unthinkable a few months ago—territorial annexation of Hungary—is well within the bounds of possibility today. By revealing their capacity for ruthlessness, the Germans have now unmistakably shown the world what it can expect in the future.

A drive to the East is nothing new; every commentator on German affairs has been talking about it since the days of Bismarck; but what is newly clarified is the probability that that drive involves something more than mere economic prestige and power.

It is worth noting that Germany's absorption of both Austria and Czecho-Slovakia has meant the absorption of the two industrial regions of the old Habsburg monarchy. The agricultural areas, with the exception of Slovakia, remain outside.

Now, that sprawling empire was heartily reviled by all good lovers of freedom, and that is why it went the way of all empires. But nevertheless, far-seeing statesmen have recognized ever since the war that the disappearance of the huge Austro-Hungarian free trade area has been a disaster for the Danubian basin. Instead of an industrial-agricultural region boasting free flow of commerce within its borders, the post-war era has seen a multitude of petty states, each with a tariff wall higher than the next.

In fact, one of the goals of former Czecho-Slovak Prime Minister Hodza was the formation of some sort of Danubian customs union to facilitate exchange of goods among the states of southeastern Europe.

May Reform Old Customs Union

What now could be more ironical—or more likely—than that the Nazis, pointing to the evident advantages of such a plan, will attempt to annex the remaining parts of the old empire in order to reform the economic entity that existed before the war? Accomplishment of such a design would require complete Nazi control of Hungary, Rumania and Yugoslavia, a control that could only be obtained by direct domination in some degree similar to that of Czecho-Slovakia.

The difference to the rest of the world be that, while the Austro-Hungarian Empire carried on normal trade relations with other countries, the peculiar Nazi idea of self-sufficiency precludes a free exchange of goods with the outside world. Thus, a re-establishment of the empire on Nazi lines would mean the erection of a huge wall around that empire, to the exclusion—so far as possible—of trade with foreign countries.

The way was paved at Munich for the resignation of southeastern Europe to Germany; but the forcible annexation of Czecho-Slovakia means that the process is likely to proceed more rapidly and more ruthlessly and more thoroughly than before.

Whatever restraint the Nazis now exercise towar dthe Southeast will be traceable to a desire to assuage the feelings of their Italian ally. German interference with the independence of Yugoslavia, for instance, would be a bitter pill for the starving stomach of Mussolini. Yet it is not improbable that in exchange for a free hand in the Southeast, the Germans have promised their fellow-brigands of Italy full support for anti-French activities in the Mediterranean.

Poland in Most Dangerous Spot

Nevertheless, despite the evident logic of a continued push through the Balkans to the Black Sea, it appears to some observers that the nation now in the most dangerous position in Europe is Poland. For great, sprawling Poland—a country nearly as big as California, with over 30,000,000 inhabitants—contains areas that were taken from Germany after the war, areas where perhaps 1,000,000 Germans still live, areas which, especially in Upper Silesia, are of tremendous economic value. And Poland lies directly between Germany and the Ukraine.

Furthermore, Poland contains an enormous, discontented minority—not Germans, to be sure, for the Germans have been pretty well silenced since the "friendship" pact of 1934—a minority of some 6,000,000 vocal Ukrainians, who have genuine grievances against Polish oppression.

If the occupation of Czecho-Slovakia indicates that Germany's physical march to the eastward has fairly begun, then many a midnight conference is being held behind the official shutters of Warsaw. For Poland offers an ideal field for the Nazi termites, an even more fertile field than the republic of Masaryk.

Poland has a German minority; Poland has German territory; Poland even now splits one part of Germany from another; Poland has a Ukrainian population that can be used as a stepping-stone to the Ukrainians of the U. S. S. R.; Poland is surrounded on west, south and, partially, on the north, by the encircling but none too loving arms of Germany. The encirclement may be made more complete any day by the expected German annexation of Danzig.

Cynical Statesmanship

However, there is a vast distinction between the situation of Poland and that of Czecho-Slovakia. Aside from the difference in strength, there is the fact that Poland and the world now have before them the history of the rise and decline of the Czech Republic.

Like Czecho-Slovakia, Poland is a war-born nation. The Poles lost their independence a mere 150 years ago; they do not intend to submit to the loss of it again. No statesmen in Europe are more cynical than the Poles; their ghoulish action last October in helping destroy Czecho-Slovakia gives ample testimony. And a deal is not impossible whereby the Poles will hand over the corridor to Germany in exchange for seizure of Lithuania.

But Poland would still stand in the way of a German drive to the Ukraine. And now that the nations of Europe—including Great Britain—are beginning to realize the enormity of Nazi ambitions, it is quite conceivable that it may be on the Polish rock that the German ship will founder.

With the inclusion of the provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia within the Reich (see map at right), Hitler and his marching legions took another long step eastward last week. Although his eventual goal is the rich Russian Ukraine, the Nazi Fuehrer may first decide to recreate the pre-war Austro-Hungarian Empire (shaded area on map below). And that means danger for Hungary, Poland, Roumania and Yugoslavia.

Czech Spirit Lives On Over Here

In Washington Where Ill-Fated Republic Was Born, a Diplomat Refuses to Quit

By Hedley Donovan.

Czecho-Slovakia, born in Washington 21 years ago, today lives on in this Capital, 5,000 miles from Prague.

The republic fathered by Masaryk and Benes, until six months ago a healthy democracy the size of Illinois, last week lost its physical existence on the map of Europe. But at the very moment field-gray columns of German infantry spanned the conquered provinces, two diplomats in Washington, one on Pennsylvania avenue and the other on Massachusetts, stoutly maintained that the fatherland of Czechs and Slovaks is not dead.

Col. Vladimir Hurban, Czech minister to the United States, defied two ultimatums to surrender his legation to the German Embassy. The first was delivered in person by a Nazi emissary; the second came in a radiogram which Col. Hurban said was signed by "the former minister of foreign affairs of the Czecho-Slovak republic, Dr. Chvalkovsky."

To both demands the reply of the doughty Slovak who fought four years for his country's independence was the same. He has no power, Col. Hurban insisted, to yield the legation until he receives written instructions from his own government. And such instructions cannot come, he pointed out, until a two-thirds maority of the Czecho-Slovak national assembly ratifies the cession of territory to the Reich. There wa ssupreme dignity and perhaps an implied rebuke to some of his countrymen—in the minister's assertion:

"I took the oath to obey the laws of the Czecho-Slovak republic. No one has power to force me to act against the law."

Czech Nation Can Exist in 'Spirit'

To many observers the stand taken by Col. Hurban, however, appealing emotionally, will appear quixotic. After all, they argue, "Czechoslovakia is gone and why pretend it isn't?" But these realists forget that Czechoslovakia has been "gone" before—that Bohemia, its most important province, endured three centuries of vassaldom—that an independent Czech nation retained vitality because patriots were brave enough to "pretend" it did exist in spirit and could exist on the map.

Col. Hurban declared in a radio address Friday night that the disappearance of "the liberties of a free and independent people" cannot be permanent. "The Czecho-Slovak legation still stands," he said, "if only as a symbol that my people are still alive."

It will be a potent symbol. There are millions of Americans of Czech and Slovak descent, and it was no accident that the central European republic's Declaration of Independence was drawn up and signed in this country. When Masaryk came to the United States in May, 1918, he was received with wild enthusasim by Czech and Slovak-Americans. Their support for the cause he championed was an important factor in America's official stand on the aspirations of the subject people of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Secretary of State Lansing on May 18, 1918, announced that "the nationalistic aspirations of the Czecho-Slovaks and Yugo-Slavs for freedom have the earnest sympathy of this government." Further commitments embodied more specific support for the dream of an independent republic of Czechs and Slovaks.

Wilson Insisted On Independence

Ten days after Masaryk issued the Czecho-Slovakian declaration of independence in Washington, President Wilson backed up the proclamation with his statement of October 28, making plain that the mere autonomy of Czechs and Slovaks could not be accepted by this country. Their full independence was a basic condition for any peace settlement, he announced.

That independence was attained within a few weeks and ratified at Versailles June 28, 1919. It was maintained unimpaired until the last pact of Munich, and in shadowy form, until last week.

The forces which led the United

Hitler Moved in March Again

By Leland Stowe.

The events of the last few days have once more confirmed the gloomy prophets who have become accustomed to chanting:

"Watch out for Hitler in March."

Only a month ago they were hoisting storm signals on every side, many of them specifying March 6 or 7 as the next zero hour for another Nazi hurricane. They were only a week too early in their predictions. On March 15 the Fuehrer began chalking up another series of red-letter days in the amazing March calendar of nazidom, which began to take shape six years ago.

This calendar has already reached almost fabulous proportions. In summary form it now stands as follows:

March 5, 1933: Hitler wins the last elections under the Weimar Republic and becomes outright dictator of Germany.

Mrch 16, 1935: Hitler repudiates Versailles restrictions, restores universal military service and announces a new German army of 12 army corps, numbering up to 500,000 men.

March 7, 1936: Nazi Germany reoccupies the demilitarized Rhineland as Hitler destroys last military clause of the Versailles treaty and repudiates the freely negotiated Treaty of Locarno.

March 11, 1938: Hitler forces Chancellor Schuschnigg's resignation, imposes a Nazi cabinet upon Vienna and launches the military occupation of Austria.

March 15-16, 1939—Hitler annexes and assumes a "protectorate" over Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia.

Thus, within the space of six years, five of the most significant events in the history of the Third Reich have occurred between the end of February and April 1—and astrologists may play with this string of coincidence to their delight, while the superstitious point out that "March" derives from the Latin "Mars."

Only in 1934 and 1937 have there been gaps in Hitler's March offensives. The first of these may be explained by the internal dissension inside the Nazi party which led to the blood purge of June, 1934; while the abnormal quiet of Hitler during March, 1937, may have been due to the unexpected and embarassing resistance of Spanish Republicans. Without these gaps, however, March has spelled plenty of trouble for all of Hitler's adversaries and has changed the map of Europe to an unbelievable degree.

Up to the present time Hitler has never undertaken a great gamble in the month of March that he did not win. Perhaps his March successes have given Hitler a belief that March is the month of his destiny. In a man of such intense mysticism it would not be surprising.

On the other hand, the effective timing of Hitler's major moves has always revealed a rare sense of political realism. Usually he has struck at the precisely opportune moment, when conditions played in his favor and greatly increased his prospects of success.

Canada Prepares — Royal Coach for King and Queen

Ottawa, Ont., March 18 (INS)—Paints specially sent from England are being used here to redecorate the vice-regal state coach of Canadian governors general which will be used for the visit of the King and Queen here this summer.

It is being repainted to match the royal coach in London. Royal dark maroon with gold striping will be the general finish while the chassis and wheels will be a royal red.

The coach, used here by vice royalty since the regime of Earl Grey, in 1904, originally came from Melbourne, Australia, where it was used for official occasions by the governors-general of the Commonwealth.

China's Fate Rests With Women, Says Leader

Chungking, March 18. (INS) — "The responsibility whether China will die or survive rests with the Chinese women," Mme. Chiang Kai-Shek declared here.

She also expressed her determination to continue relentless efforts in the organization of Chinese women throughout the country to participate in war work.

Interest in Religion Increasing in U. S., Many City-Dwellers Say in Poll

But Farming Areas Report A Decrease

Half of Voters Attend Church Less Often Than Parents Did, Survey Shows

By Dr. George Gallup.

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 18.—A stock-taking survey conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion among church members and nonchurch members in all parts of the United States shows that while country and small-town people think that religion has been losing its hold somewhat in their communities, a surprisingly large number of city dwellers believe that interest in religion has been increasing "during the last few years" in their communities.

The substantial number of those interviewed say that they do not go to church as often as their parents did, however.

GALLUP

The survey which is the first of its kind to be conducted, included men and women in all sections and all walks of life—from colored people in the South to taxi drivers in New York and retired farmers in California. A scientifically selected cross-section of the American public were asked whether they thought interest in the churches had been rising or falling, what the churches could do to increase interest, whether or not people listen to radio sermons, and other qustions.

The Institute found that 50 per cent—or exactly half of those interviewed—are not attending churches as often as their parents did. The Institute's question and the answers are:

"Do you go to church more often or less often than your parents did?"

Less often	50%
More often	18
About the same	32

In the last 15 years, however, the radio has brought a new scope to American churches, and the Institute's survey found that 31 per cent of all those interviewed said they had listened to all or some part of a church broadcast on the preceding Sunday.

Almost two-thirds of these persons had not gone to ordinary church services, their answers showed.

Many City Dwellers Find Interest Gaining

President Roosevelt stressed the relationship between religion and democracy in his opening message to Congress this year, and the Institute survey has attempted to find out how well the general public thinks the churches have been playing their part.

"Do you think interest in religion in this community has increased or decreased during the last few years?" the Institute asked.

The vote for the country as a whole divides evenly, but a closer look shows an important difference between rural and urban Americans. The largest number of city dwellers report that interest in churches is increasing in their communities. The largest number of farmers and small-town people, living in traditional strongholds of American religion, see a decline.

The percentages for the three groups are:

	Interest—Increasing	Decreasing	About Same
Farmers	27%	40%	33%
Small Towns	29	46	25
City Dwellers	42	32	26

Some reasons for an increasing interest in the church and in religion, the comments of typical voters show, are (1) the influence of the depression, (2) growing apprehension of another world war and (3) disturbing news from other parts of the world in general.

What Could Churches Do?

Churchmen and laymen will learn much more about the problems of American churches when the United States Government's regular Census of Religious Bodies, due in 1937 but postponed because of lack of appropriations, is made public shortly. The census will not attempt to answer such questions as "What could churches do to increase the interest of the public?" however. The Institute has put such a question to the voters in today's survey, and the result is a list of hundreds of spontaneous suggestions.

A majority of those interviewed either thought there was nothing the churches can do to increase interest or were unable to make any specific suggestions, but here are the most frequent recommendations, listed in the order of mention:

1. "Select ministers who are more intelligent."
2. "Arrange more social activities around the churches."
3. "Become more 'modern' and 'liberal.'"
4. "Eliminate hypocrisy."
5. "Stop emphasizing money and contributions."
6. "Let church people be more friendly."
7. "Increase the number of services."
8. "Apply sermons to everyday matters."
9. "Make special activities for young people."
10. "Emphasize the Bible."
11. "Stay out of politics."
12. "Make services shorter."
13. "Manage to have more unity among churches."
14. "Provide transportation for those who need it."
15. "Improve church music."

'Wouldn't Be Church Without a Sermon'

Some clergymen have experimented with church services without sermons, but the great majority in the Institute survey (93 per cent of those with opinions) say that removing the sermon from its place in Sunday morning worship would not please them. "It wouldn't be church without a sermon," or "the sermon is the main part of the service," are their typical reasons.

The survey found that the greatest number of persons interviewed who did not go to church on a typical Sunday spent the morning hours either "catching up on my sleep" or "doing some work around the house." These two explanations accounted for nearly half of all such remarks. Other reasons, given less frequently, were: "Had to work," "did some reading," "read the Sunday papers," and "went for a drive."

Young people reported signs of increasing community interest in religion more often than their elders. The opinions of different age levels are:

	Increasing	Decreasing	About Same
Under 30	37%	34%	29%
30 to 49	38	36	26
50 and over	32	40	28

Administration's Word on Recovery Still Is Awaited

Business Wants to Know if Appeasement Policy Is to Be Carried Into Action Through Specific Legislative Action

By John C. O'Brien.

Congress enters the twelfth week of the present session next week with the country still waiting for some definite sign that the Administration's policy is actually headed in the direction indicated by Harry L. Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, in his Des Moines speech—toward recovery and away from reform.

As yet "business appeasement" is no more than a phrase and confusion clouds almost every issue before Congress having a direct or indirect bearing upon recovery. No one on Capitol Hill seems to know if or how the White House plans to translate appeasement into a program of legislative action. The President is said to be caught between two conflicting groups—the Democratic conservatives and the New Dealers—each seeking to pull him along different paths. Congress, hopelessly divided, is marking time, apparently unwilling or unable to take the reins in its own hands.

The confusion covers not only Administration legislative policy but political strategy as well. The same conflict appears to be going on with respect to political strategy as to legislative policy. No one seems to know whether the President plans to carry on his fight to keep the Democratic Party a New Deal party or compromise with the conservatives who want to rescue it from New Deal domination.

Business Wants Answer to These

Specifically the country, and particularly the business community, are waiting for the answers to the following questions:

Will corporation taxes be revised to remove deterrents to business and restore confidence in the business world?

Is there to be a reversal of the Government spending policy or must curtailment wait on an increase in the national income?

Will the monopoly investigation result in monopolistic business controls such as were exercised under the National Recovery Administration or will the disclosures be used as an excuse for another attack on business?

Was the blunt rejection of the modifications of the securities exchange act submitted by the stock exchanges a forerunner of still closer supervision of stock trading or was it a manifesto to disprove the charges of leftist New Dealers that William O. Douglas, chairman of the SEC, is not liberal enough to sit on the Supreme Court bench?

Has the Administration a plan for raising the domestic price of cotton without increasing the Government's huge investment in cotton loans?

In the matter of curtailment of Government spending and tax revision all that seems to be clear is that the President would like to cut expenditures if possible and maintain revenues from the taxes on corporate income at their present level. So far the President has given no indication that he believes spending may be curtailed in any specific direction. He is insisting on $150,000,000 additional relief funds to carry the work relief program through to June 30. He has asked for an increase in revenues, including taxes, to finance the parity payments to farmers provided in the 1938 farm bill, but he is not pressing the point. He has dismissed the suggestion that there should be any attempt to balance the budget until the national income rises from its present level of between $65,000,000,000 and $70,000,000,000 to a level of $80,000,000,000.

Confusion Over Tax Revision

Among the Democratic conservatives in Congress the feeling is strong that a beginning in the curtailment of spending should be made this year, but there seems to be no definite idea how it should be done. One group, headed by Senator Harry F. Byrd, would like to slash all Government appropriation bills by a specified percentage. A larger group would like to defer another deficiency appropriation pending a thorough investigation of relief. Still another group would like to hold the relief appropriation down to something like half the amount the President is seeking.

The controversy over tax revision is even more confused. The President has indicated that he is not yet ready to side either with the New Dealers who are urging him to retain the capital gains tax so offensive to business or the Treasury officials and conservative Democrats in Congress who would like to abolish the so-called "deterrent levies" and impose a single corporation tax with an upper limit of 22 per cent. This plan envisages repeal of the capital stock, excess profits and undistributed profits taxes. The single corporate levy would incorporate the social security tax, thus eliminating the duplication of returns corporations are now required to file. Another Congressional group would go even farther than the Treasury would like to go and lower the rates of the surtax on personal incomes.

Having embarked on the monopoly investigation neither the White House nor Congress appears to have made up its mind whether to push ahead with it or mollify the fears of business by putting on the brakes. The New Dealers who have the show in hand are keen to go ahead, as evidenced by the proposal to seek an additional appropriation of $2,000,000, the original appropriation of $500,000 having been all but exhausted.

Confusion also exists as to the ultimate objectives of the monopoly committee. Among the members of the committee there is no agreement as to whether the disclosures warrent recommendations for forcing a decentralization of monopolistic enterprises or a system of regulation of monopolies such as was attempted under the NRA.

The lack of agreement between the President and Congress on legislative matters is just as marked in the matter of political strategy. The evidence of a desire on the part of the President to avoid friction with the conservative Democrats in Congress has been his hesitancy to crack the whip. There has not been the slightest sign that he desires to heal the breach between his New Deal supporters and the conservatives who are bent upon regaining control of the party machinery. His appointments have been designed to please the New Dealers rather than the old-line Democrats.

The appointment of Harry L. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce and Frank Murphy as Attorney General were salt in the wounds of the objects of the "purge" of 1938 and the Congressional critics of the sit-down strike. And on top of that he risked a curt rebuff from the Senate conservatives in sending in the name of Mr. Amlie as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

If any clear direction arises from the bog of confusion in which the Administration seems mired it is the direction in which the conservative Democrats, ranged behind Vice President John N. Garner, are going. Their way leads directly away from the New Deal toward control of the 1940 Democratic convention.

Rail Brotherhoods Maintain Their Independent Ways

'Big Four' Believed Unlikely to Affiliate With A. F. of L. or C. I. O., but May Co-operate in Labor Peace Movement

By Ray Blosser.

Cleveland, March 18 (AP).—Collective bargaining has a clear track on America's railroads. It is generally taken for granted, by workers and employers alike.

It has been a connecting link in the relations between brakeman and boss for years—long before Congress made bargaining legally recognized procedure for all industry, through the Wagner act. Beyond collective bargaining in the railroad industry, of course, is a program of mediation which many observers often have pointed to as the apex of American employer-employe dealings.

Renewal of peace conferences between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations has focused new attention upon the railroad unions, especially the "Big Four" brotherhoods which comprise more than 300,000 workers essential to operation of United States roads.

"We have stabilized the industry," declares the leader of the largest of the brotherhoods. He is A. F. Whitney, a white-haired, vigorous New Dealer, who presides over 134,000 members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, with rugged Alvanley Johnston at the throttle as grand chief engineer, estimates its membership at 60,000. Founded in 1863, by a dozen locomotive engineers meeting between runs in Detroit, it is the oldest of the four.

Polished, diplomatic D. B. Robertson heads the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen's 78,000 members. Fourth of the big unions of men who actually operate the trains—as distinguished from the "shop crafts"—is the Order of Railway Conductors, with 35,000-40,000 members headed by J. A. Phillips.

The "Big Four" are not affiliated with the C. I. O. or A. F. of L. Neither are they affiliated among themselves. A. F. of L. in the past has wooed them and only last week C. I. O.'s John L. Lewis proposed an all-inclusive union taking in the brotherhoods, with Whitney and Robertson named as "types of executives" to head the union.

Railroad circles hold it unlikely that the brotherhoods will veer from traditional independence. A cooperative agreement with the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. is, however, favored by Whitney, at least.

The operating groups represent, roughly, the engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen and flagmen. The brotherhoods overlap to various degrees among themselves in a mixture of industrial and craft unionization.

A railway conductor, for instance, may be in Phillips' organization, or in Whitney's. An engineer may be found with Johnston or Robertson. Naturally there is rivalry, but jurisdictional matters seldom come to public attention, and in a wage problem the four usually are found at the same conference table, working together.

Never have the brotherhoods actually authorized a Nation-wide strike. When they threatened one in 1916, Congress hurriedly met their demands and passed the Adamson law, setting up a standard eight-hour day for railroad workers, with time and a half for overtime.

Contrasting with the "Casey Joneses" are the "shop crafts." Some 17 of these A. F. of L.-affiliated unions joined leaders of three of the brotherhoods to form in 1926 the Railway Labor Executives Union for unity in wage actions and such matters as opposing Government-subsidized waterways. The fourth brotherhood, the trainmen, co-operates closely.

Chairman George M. Harrison, of Cincinnati, says there is no formal reason for close co-operation of the shop crafts and brotherhoods, but "we sit down and work on problems

Chicago to Elect Mayor in Biggest Election of the Year

Mayor Kelly, Running for Re-election Will Be Easy Victor—Unless There's an Upset; His Opponent, D. H. Green, Combats Machine

By Geoffrey Parsons, Jr.

CHICAGO, March 18.—There is a mayoral campaign in progress in Chicago. The election falls on April 4 and is entitled to rating as the most important in the country before 1940 blows in with the fevered politics of a Presidential year.

Chicago is the second largest city in the country. By most standards—tax rate, Government services, crime, housing, transportation and official morality—it ranks among the worst governed cities in the country. The campaign to elect a mayor of Chicago, therefore, might be expected to provide an exciting dramatization of a battle between good and evil in the field of municipal politics. This campaign certainly does not do that.

Mayor Edward J. Kelly is now not only the top man of the Kelly-Nash machine in Chicago but the dominant political figure in the important State of Illinois. Barring unforeseen accidents of the kind that occasionally turn a political campaign upside down, he will be re-elected on April 4.

Completely ignoring his Republican opponent, the youthful and personable Dwight H. Green, Mayor Kelly has campaigned by spending ten days at his handsome Miami home and finally returning to Chicago to point at his "record." So far as one can discover, the only concern bothering the Kelly-Nash machine is whether Mayor Kelly can poll a total of 1,000,000 votes to prove to President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party that Boss Kelly is the big-shot Democratic leader of the Middle West.

Mayor Kelly polled more than 600,000 votes in the Democratic primary on February 28, roughly 50 per cent of all the votes cast in both the Republican and Democratic primaries. He defeated his Democratic opponent, State's Attorney Thomas J. Courtney, by almost two-to-one. After doing nothing in four years as county prosecutor to inflict the law on the Kelly-Nash machine, Mr. Courtney, with the aid of Col. Frank Knox's Chicago Daily News had sought unsuccessfully to persuade the voters that he should be allowed to do from the mayor's office the machine-busting job he had not even attempted to do in his strategic position as State's attorney.

Opponent Young Utility Lawyer

Mr. Green, Mayor Kelly's Republican opponent in the April election, is 42, a young utility lawyer with a good record as assistant United States Attorney and as United States Attorney. He was a central figure in the Federal income tax prosecution of Al Capone ten years ago. Later he unsuccessfully prosecuted Samuel Insull in connection with the collapse of the Insull utilities empire.

In the primary election, he polled 212,000 votes, three-and-one-half times as many as did his Republican rival, aging William Hale Thompson, "Big Bill," thrice Mayor of Chicago in bygone days.

The Democratic vote in the primary was more than three times the Republican vote. Nevertheless, the Republican chieftains took some heart in the fact that their party drew out nearly 90,000 more voters last month than they did in the primary last spring. The Democratic vote, on the other hand, was up less than 10,000.

This week, Edward F. Moore, chairman of the Republican county central committee, took a step which probably will win votes for Green, but most observers agree that it cannot help enough to do any good. Mr. Moore persuaded the executive committee of the Republican central city committee to "purge" four ward committeemen who, the evidence indicated, had been playing ball with the Kelly-Nash boys instead of with their own party.

Among those whose ward organizations have been ousted from any part of the Green campaign and—more important to them—any share in the rather generous Green campaign funds, are those of State Senator Dan Serritella, committeeman of the First Ward; Alderman William V. Pacelli, of the Twentieth Ward; Paul Rothenberg, of the Twenty-fourth Ward, and Samuel Shaffer, the Twenty-ninth.

Mr. Moore's discovery that Republican politicians will do business with the incumbent machine of another party is no addition to the lore of big city politics. Tammany in New York often found Republicans who would help Tammany if Tammany helped them.

The system is quite simple. The Kelly-Nash machine ran no one against Dan Serritella last spring when he was seeking re-election to the State Senate. In return, obliging Dan ran no aldermanic candidate against Michael "Hony Dink" Kenna, of the Kelly-Nash Kennas, in the recent city primary.

The results of this bi-partisan alliance showed up all too plainly. Chairman Moore thought, in the precinct returns of the vote for candidate Green. The ward committeemen were allowed $20 per precinct with which to hire workers on primary day. It was assumed that at least four workers would be hired for $20, and that even if these workers were unable to round up any Republican votes in the precinct they, at least, would vote for Mr. Green, whose campaign committee was supplying the funds. A substantial number of precincts in the wards of the purged committeemen were found to have recorded not a single vote for Mr. Green.

Prof. Douglas In Ward Fight

On top of that, the Republican officials at each polling place are supposedly named by the ward committeemen from the ranks of good Republicans, happy and willing to vote for the organization candidate. Where, wondered Mr. Moore, were these votes in the precincts where Green failed to score?

One of the more interesting aldermanic fights of the coming Chicago election lies in the Fifth Ward, which embraces the University of Chicago along the lake-front and the overcrowded tenements of Chicago's Harlem to the west. Prof. Paul Douglas, nationally known economist and reform advocate at the university, led the seven-man fight for Fifth Ward alderman in the primary. Unable to get a majority of the votes, Prof. Douglas is now engaged in a run-off with James J. Cusack, incumbent alderman, who finished second to the economist.

Prof. Douglas' opportunity to enter the race came when Mr. Cusack deserted the Kelly-Nash machine with his boss, Horace Lindheimer, to support Tom Courtney in the primary. Prof. Douglas, who had previously tried to lure Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes into the mayoral fight to smash the Kelly-Nash machine, then entered the lists against Cusack as the Kelly-Nash candidate.

The Kelly-Nash machine adroitly used Prof. Douglas during the primary as window-dressing to prove that instead of being a corrupt, old-fashioned Tammany-type big city machine, it was a progressive, forward-looking, New Deal outfit. Now, although Mayor Kelly still gives the good professor nominal support, the wise boys say that the machine will knife him badly on election day. Alderman Cusack's boss, Mr. Lindheimer, was welcomed back into the Kelly-Nash fold last Thursday, which should be enough of a tip-off to warn even an amiable amateur politician like Prof. Douglas.

67% Approve First Lady's D.A.R. Stand

Southerners Dissent by a Majority of 57% In National Survey

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 18.—Three weeks ago when Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt resigned from the D. A. R., reportedly because of the organization's refusal to let colored Marian Anderson sing in Washington's Constitution Hall, the First Lady caused a buzz of comment from Maine to California.

Because every major gesture of a President's wife has a political effect, whether intended or not, observers in Washington wondered whether Mrs. Roosevelt had been wise or unwise.

What would the Democratic South think of her action?

Today the American Institute of Public Opinion reports the sentiments of men and women in all parts of the United States on the issue, and the Institute's findings show that while Southern voters have not been pleased, the majority of voters elsewhere are in sympathy with Mrs. Roosevelt's action.

The vote for the country at large is:

Approve of Mrs. Roosevelt's action in resigning	67%
Disapprove	33%

Southerners dissented by an average vote of 57 per cent, but even some of the dissenters declared they had no objection to Marian Anderson's singing as a paid performer. It was Mrs. Roosevelt's "making a fuss about it" that they disliked.

A majority of Democrats in Mrs. Roosevelt's own party approve of what she did, however, and it is interesting to note that most Republicans do likewise:

	Approve	Disapprove
Democrats	68%	32%
Republicans	63	37

Not Clear-Cut "Racial Issue"

The vote is not a clear-cut laboratory test of the racial issue, for Mrs. Roosevelt's own popularity is inescapably involved.

In a recent survey the Institute found Mrs. Roosevelt's popularity greater than her husband's. Sixty-seven per cent of the voters throughout the country said they approved, in general, of the way Mrs. Roosevelt had conducted herself as First Lady, while 58 per cent were supporting President Roosevelt.

Nevertheless, the most frequent reason given by those who back up Mrs. Roosevelt's decision is:

"There shouldn't be any race prejudice in this country."

Other reasons put forward for approving her resignation are (1) Marian Anderson's special talent as a singer and (2) general disapproval of the D. A. R. as "too autocratic."

Most of those who criticize Mrs. Roosevelt for resigning say that "color lines have to be kept" or that "it wasn't a big enough issue." A few object that Mrs. Roosevelt should have stayed within the D. A. R. and sought to change its "attitude."

The First Lady's action has been about equally popular with men and women voters. Sixty-nine per cent of the women say they approve of her course in resigning from the D. A. R., as compared with 66 per cent of the men.

Younger people (aged 18 to 30) tend to be more sympathetic with Mrs. Roosevelt's action than their elders.

Section by section the vote is:

Sections	Approve	Disapprove
New England	79%	21%
Mid Atlantic	75	25
East Central	71	29
West Central	65	35
South	43	57
West	80	20

African Trade Unionists Will War on Fascism

Johannesburg, South Africa, March 18 (INS).—Resolutions urging a fight against Nazism in South Africa have been set out in the preliminary agenda for the South African Trades and Labor Council's national executive committee conference to be held at Kimberley, April 10 to 14.

The incoming national executive council will be instructed to take steps to "alter by counterpropaganda the mentality of fascism prevailing among certain sections of workers in the ranks of affiliated bodies."

The conference will also be asked to pass a resolution "resisting in every possible manner the attempt of Germany to obtain the return of her former colonies in Africa."

Protocol Chiefs Lay Elaborate Plans to Welcome Noted Visitors

Department Faces Busy Calendar

King George and Queen Elizabeth Head List of Notables Due In Washington Soon

By Edward T. Folliard.

The State Department is the scene of sharply contrasting emotions and activities these days. In one office of the weather-scarred, rococo building an indignant Sumner Welles issues a slashing attack on Nazi Germany; in another, officials make ready for an extraordinary season of international good will.

These latter are the State Department's protocol officers, who now are setting the stage for the greatest invasion of friendly monarchs, monarchs-to-be and statesmen that Washington has ever seen.

Protocol is a word derived from the Greek In its original form one syllable meant "first" and another "glue." The word was used to describe the introductory page to a manuscript. But that meaning has been greatly broadened, particularly in the field of diplomacy, and now, in the words of one expert, protocol means "a code developed over centuries in the cultivation of good will among nations."

The Division of Protocol in the State Department is relatively small. It is located on the first floor (Room 186 is the entrance), and there are only ten persons employed in it, five of them clerks. If Hollywood had to prepare for the pageantry and ceremonial that now confronts this division it would enlist a whole army of directors and assistant directors.

Calendar of Famous Visitors

Royal couples have come to Washington before, and also Presidents and prime ministers, but never in such a thrilling cluster as is now in prospect. Here is the calendar:

King George and Queen Elizabeth, June 8-9. They are coming over on a cruiser, will have a retinue of more than 40 persons and will bring along something like 200 trunks.

Eamon de Valera, prime minister of Eire, May 7. Like the British sovereigns, he will be a guest at the White House.

Gen. Anastasio Somoza, President of Nicaragua, and Senora de Somozo, May 5. They, too, will be White House guests.

Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha of Norway. They will be guests of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Hyde Park on April 27 and will visit Washington after a tour of the country.

Crown Prince Frederick and Crown Princess Ingrid of Denmark, who will visit Hyde Park earlier in April and come to Washington some time after May 2.

Responsibility for the reception and welfare of these distinguished visitors rests on the shoulders of George T. Summerlin, chief of the Division of Protocol; Stanley Woodward, assistant chief, and H. Charles Spruks, ceremonial officer. Theirs will be a delicate task, and one calling for a lot of plain hard work.

For each entourage, a program of split-second accuracy must be worked out. Although the arrival of their Britannic Majesties is yet almost three months away, the protocol experts already are up to their ears planning for it. When the big day comes, there must be no fumbling, no mishaps and, above all, no "incidents."

King and Queen Cross Border June 7

King George and Queen Elizabeth, first reigning British sovereigns ever to visit this once-British outpost, will cross the Canadian border at Niagara Falls and head for Washington on June 7, traveling in a 12-car special train. Another 12-car train, bearing reporters, cameramen and radio men, will precede this one.

Summerlin will be in charge from the moment the border is crossed. Long before this the schedule will have been worked out with the railroad men, and an elaborate system of protection perfected. The State Department has a small force of special agents, men whose names never appear in print. They will be assigned to guard the royal visitors, but they will be reinforced by a much larger force of Secret Service men and three crack detectives from Scotland Yard. Here in Washington, Summerlin will arrange with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, for a special detail of detectives and uniformed police.

The royal train is scheduled to arrive at Union Station before luncheon on June 8. Ultimately a definite hour—a specific minute—will be designated on the itinerary.

King George and Queen Elizabeth, on their way out of the trainshed, will walk through a double line of Marines. The Army Band will be waiting outside to play "God Save the King," and after posing for the cameramen and the newsreels, the royal couple will get into President Roosevelt's crested limousine and start for the White House, preceded by a formidable motorcycle escort.

White House Stay Will Save Calls

The fact that the King and Queen will stay at the White House will save a great deal of ceremonial and hurly-burly. When the King and Queen of Siam came here in April, 1931, they stayed at the Larz Anderson mansion at 2118 Massachusetts avenue, and the following official program was in order:

"10:15 a.m.—Their Majesties and the other members of the royal party will arrive at the White House for the official call on the President and Mrs. Hoover. Upon the termination of the call, their Majesties and the other members of the royal party will return to their majesties' residence.

"11:00 a.m.—The President and Mrs. Hoover, with the President's military and naval aides, will call upon their Majesties at their residence."

With their Britannic Majesties always within shouting distance of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, so to speak, this traveling back and forth will be obviated. That will give the protocol experts a little more time to handle the thousand and one details that will confront them.

One problem with which they are wrestling now is where to house the members of their Majesties' large entourage—the ladies-in-waiting, the gentlemen of the bedchamber, the knights-at-arms, the supernumaries and the valets and ladies' maids. Obviously they can't all be taken care of in the relatively tiny White House.

When the King and Queen venture away from the White House, every detail must be planned in advance. If it is a visit to Mount Vernon, the time, the route, the order in which the limousines will fall in line—all this will have to be down on paper long beforehand. Likewise with their Majesties' visit to Capitol Hill and to Greenbelt, if, as has been suggested, this is included in the program.

Problem of Seating Arrangements

Ceremonial Officer Spruks' big job will come with the state dinner the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give for their royal guests. He it is who must decide on the seating arrangements. In Buckingham Palace, the King and Queen would sit next to each other. If the American interpretation of protocol is followed, the President and the King will sit on opposite sides of the table, with the Queen at the President's right and Mrs. Roosevelt on the King's right.

So far as their Majesties are concerned, they already have made it clear that they want to follow the ancient precept of "When in Rome do as the Romans do." Recently, the King's acting secretary, Alan Frederick Lascelles, called at the State Department to talk over the visit of the British sovereigns.

Newspaperwomen asked the burning question about American dowagers and debutantes curtsying to the Queen.

"We will be guests of your country, and you naturally set the customs to be followed," Lascelles said. In other words, Americans should be themselves and prepare to shake hands instead of bowing the knee.

Incidentally, Lascelles got off what former Mayor Jimmy Walker would relish as a "nifty." One reporter asked him if he were related to the Earl of Harewood, whose family name is Lascelles.

"Yes," said the King's secretary.

"How?"

"Quite legitimately."

Prime Minister de Valera, who comes here a month ahead of the British sovereigns, will be making his third visit to Washington. The tall, scholarly, New York-born Irish leader came here in 1919, not long after his sensational escape from an English prison. In this country he raised something like $6,000,000 to aid the cause of Irish independence, every cent of which has now been paid back with interest. He came here again in 1929, at which time he was engaged in founding the Irish Press, of which Robert Brennan, now Minister to the United States, was the first editor.

De Valera to Make Third Visit

De Valera was honored in many ways on his last visit. For one thing, the traffic lights flashed green wherever he went, a gesture that obviously delighted him. But this time there will be many more honors. He comes as the head of a state, and he will be treated accordingly.

He will be greeted on his arrival in New York by Protocol Chief Summerlin, and escorted to Washington, where he will go immediately to the White House. His visit here will last three days, but he will spend only one night—Sunday, May 7—at the White House. On the other two, he will stay at the Kalorama road home of Minister Brennan.

On Monday night, de Valera will attend a banquet in his honor given by the Allied Irish Societies of this city, and the following night he will address a gathering in Constitution Hall. The next morning he will start out on a tour that will take him to every part of the United States. Even so, he will not be able to accept half the invitations that have poured in since his visit was announced.

Philadelphia, New York and Boston have arranged elaborate receptions for the Irish leader. In the latter city, he will be the guest of Harvard University. Other cities that await him are Cleveland, Chicago (where he will attend a 4-day International Irish Congress), Minneapolis, St. Paul, Butte, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis and New Orleans.

How do the State Department protocol men feel about their work? Stanley Woodward, assistant chief of the Division of Protocol, gave the answer recently in a talk before the Congressional Club of Washington, and what he had to say about the American newspapermen and photographers was of particular interest. An excerpt from his talk:

"In connection with these visits, there will naturally be a certain amount of ceremony. American ceremony, as we practice it, is an interesting institution. We have no royal coaches in which to parade our visitors, no palaces, and no diplomatic uniforms or other foreign ceremonial paraphernalia.

"We have, of course, the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, which always do much to make our ceremonies dignified, and best of all, we have a native sincerity and hospitality which I believe more than make up for the gold braid and other trappings that we lack.

"The members of the American press and the ever-present cameramen are not always conducive to the solemnity of our official ceremonies, but, nevertheless, they are really a great asset to us and an essential part of any work in public relations. The very fact that the press is free in our country to exress its views as it likes, gives more point to the occasions to which I am now referring.

"In a country where there is a controlled press, it always seems to me that everything is stereotyped and the official functions, duly reported by controlled reporters, cut and dried. Indeed, if it were not for the press and camera newsreel, the visits of the distinguished visitors to the United States would lose at least a portion of their full value."

George Summerlin (right), chief of the State Department's division of protocol, is no idle man these days, for before him is one of the fullest calendars that ever confronted the Nation's official receptionist. An impressive list of personages, including royalty and statesmen, will soon be on their way to our shores with plans to visit the Capital. Heading this list are their Britannic majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth (left), who'll reach Washington early in June. Summerlin has a thousand details to attend to in preparation for that event

Coming also are Crown Prince Olav, of Norway, and Princess Maude (right); and the Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark, Frederick and Ingrid (below). Both royal couples will be received by President and Mrs. Roosevelt

Eamon de Valera, prime minister of Erie, will be in the United States this spring, and the protocol chiefs plan to accord him, too, all the courtesies due the leader of a friendly government

Canada Ready To Aid British Arms Program

Expects Big Orders For Airplanes And Other War Supplies

By D. M. Halliday—10 pt Gar ....

Toronto, March 18. — Doubts raised in the minds of British officialdom regarding the handling of the contract from the War Office for the manufacture of Brenn machine guns in Canada by charges in the press leading to an official inquiry by Parliament are being abated in further negotiations for orders from Britain.

There are strong indications that this Dominion is being regarded as a major source of wartime supplies, if, as and when a conflict abroad should break out. At the same time, national defense requirements might be linked with those of the empire through standardization and interchangeability of military equipment and supplies.

Great Britain will not shy from investing in large-scale production in Canada with contracts being estimated as high a0s $250,00.00 over a period of years. Defense Minister Ian Mackenzie has introduced into Parliament a bill to take excess profits out of the manufacture of munitions and other military equipment.

Sets Up Four-Year Purchasing Board

Already sizable contracts for airplanes have been received from Great Britain and a great diversity of orders is contemplated, including guns, modern tanks and possibly high-speed naval craft, such as the royal air force is now testing against bombs and machine-gun fire from the air. These could be used for coastal and antisubmarine patrol or for establishing liaison between th eair and naval arms.

Officials of the Canadian Manufacturers Association have conferred with Mr. Mackenzie and his aides with a view to learning what are th erequirements of the defense department, and members will be consulted to learn their plant potentials. A survey has already been made of all larger industrial plants, envisioning the possibility of their conversion to unified output in case the necessity arose for manufacturing mobilization should hostilities involve Great Britain and Canada.

The new defense legislation contemplates setting up a four-man purchasing board and limiting to 5 per cent on the capital actually utilized in performance on non-competitive contracts.

Mussolini Sees Tunisia As African 'Sudetenland'

If Il Duce Strikes at France Across Mediterranean, He'll Have A 'Konrad Henkin' to Help Him

Tunis, Tunisia — (Correspondence of the Associated Press)—If Premier Mussolini goes to war against France in Africa as a sequel to the current Italo-French friction over Mediterranean questions, he will have a "Konrad Henlein"—a "little Duce"—to help him. Against him will be arrayed a "free corps" of anti-Italian refugees from Libya, and French camel cavalry.

Tunisia, a French protectorate, has figured prominently in the Fascist campaign against France, a campaign born of Italy's desire for greater influence in the Mediterranean. In Tunisia itself Italy apparently wants more rights for the thousands of Italians living here.

The presence of "Konrad Henlein" and a "free corps" make Tunisia in these respects similar to the Sudetenland Germany won from Czecho-Slovakia in the European crisis last fall. Italy's counterpart of Henlein is handsome Enrico Santamaria.

Santamaria Acts For Mussolini

Short, stocky and big-jawed like his Duce at Rome, Santamaria is director of L'Unione, Fascist newspaper of Tunis. Scarcely forty, blue-eyed Santamaria leads Italians in Tunisia to what he insists will be union of the territory with Fascist Italy.

"We don't want war," said Santamaria recently, "but the final issue is with Il Duce. We'll do what he decides."

Santamaria, who makes frequent airplane flights to Rome, has been in Tunisia for two years. He says he was sent to look after Italian "rights," but more especially to edit the well-printed L'Unione, whose former editor was deported by French officials.

Santamaria claims there are 120,000 Italians in Tunisia as opposed to the official French census figure of 80,000. He explains the difference as due to many Italians believing the census forms were from the tax collector.

"That's natural," he said with a broad grin, "they thought they'd get out of paying taxes by saying they were Frenchmen."

Santamaria says his 120,000 Italians follow him and Benito Mussolini "almost without exception." French officials assert, however, that "only about 5,000" are faithful to Fascist Italy.

Santamaria asserts heatedly that France, which established her protectorate over strategic Tunisia in 1881, has "consistently mistreated Italians." "Although we were here first," exclaims the local leader, "we have been denied all rights that are given to Frenchmen.

"They take all the government posts, all the choicest lands, the best mines. Our guarantees of justice have been pared away little by little over the years. That might have worked with the old, weak Italy. It's a different story today. Our oppressed Italians in Tunisia must have their rights."

Moslem 'Free Corps' To Fight for France

Counteracting Santamaria's influence, however, is a voluntary "free corps" constituted long before Adolf Hitler made his Sudetenland Germans famous. Mohsen Dohfers, native chief of the 20,000 Moslem refugees from Italian Libya who have found refuge in France since Italy seized Tripoli from Turkey in 1911, says his men will fight for France. Dohfers said he remembers that the French conquered Algeria, Morocco and Tunis by force of arms—but——

"The Moslems greatly prefer France to Italy. There is an Arab proverb which says 'there is no shame and much honor in being clawed by a lion, but the lowest shame of all is to be kicked by an ass.'"

Italian-hating Dohfers escaped to Tunisia in 1936 after the Italians condemned him to death for agitating revolt and organizing an underground anti-Italian movement in Libya. The French, worried for years about Italian designs on Tunisia, recognized him as a valuable political ally. Within a year he be-

Solution to War in China Depends on Events Outside Far East

Editor's note: How do things stand in the war in China? Will Japan collapse? Is China beaten? How will it end? Those are the questions the world is asking, and here are the answers, from Elmer W. Peterson, Associated Press reporter who watched the holocaust happen. Paterson analyzes the Far Eastern crisis in this farewell to the fighting front, written en route to a new assignment in Palestine.

By Elmer W. Peterson,

Associated Press War Correspondent.

To leave the Far East today, after a year of watching an undeclared war, is to leave with many and confused impressions . . . of suffering, of dead with limbs torn and blackened by air bombing, of smoke and debris and destruction of war . . . of a modern army throwing its tenacles deep into a country of 450,000,000 people and still not being able to kill the essential unity and spirit of resistance of the Chinese people.

As to the ultimate outcome, there are as many differing opinions today as a year ago. One leaves with the hotel lobby experts still arguing and making their prophecies. . . .

. . . Japan is bewildered and nearing exhaustion. . . . No, Japan hasn't yet tapped her real strength. . . . China's position is better in many ways . . . perhaps so, but the odds are against China in the long run . . . the foreigner is finished in the Far East . . . No, Japan has overplayed her hand as regards the open door . . .

It's an endless argument, especially if one tries to see both sides of the question. But it offers two general conclusions:

(1) The solution to the Far Eastern question is now dependent on events and circumstances outside the Far East.

(2) China, as a nation, is more than ever a factor in world affairs.

War Has Reached Form of Stalemate

There is good reason for the agreement one finds today among competent observers on these two points. For the war has reached a form of stalemate. China's will to resist remains as firm as Japan's determination that they war not end in frustration.

A European war may break the deadlock. War between Japan and Russia may break it. Imposition of economic sanctions against Japan could break it. In any event, the break must come from outside.

China today rests on a political turntable. How that turntable swings is vitally important to the world at large and to the democracies especially.

If Germany moves eastward towards the Ukraine, will Japan seize the advantage to attack Russia in the East?

China's Importance To Democracies

If Europe should become heavily embroiled in war, will Japan realize her ambition of southward expansion by water far past China?

China, still on the side of the democracies, may not lack for proper allies if war engulfs the democracies. By the same token, a settlement of affairs in Europe, permitting Britain and France to take a firmer hand in the Far East, might be the lever to break the prevailing stalemate.

The ramifications of the situation are limitless. There has long been a school of thought, for example, which has credited Britain and the United States with a policy of watchful hopefulness as regards the war in China, in so far as a policy could be said to exist. The hope in this case, it has been presumed, has been for an eventually exhausted Japan and a China freed by war from venality and corruption. In short, a weakened Japan and a better China—a killing of two birds with one stone.

The dominant school of thought is that the interest of the democracies in China and in the Far East has become an inescapable one, and far advanced beyond the purely commercial and financial. The matter can be simply stated:

If China, with a population of over 400 millions, and with tremendous potential strength, does not remain free and independent, where will that China go? With Russia? With the totalitarian states? against democracy and the democracies?

Ironically, perhaps, but none the less true, China has acquired bargaining power in world politics, after over a year and a half of gruelling warfare.

In the direct struggle between Japan and China alone the arguments are endless. To the belief that Japan has seriously weakened herself, financially and militarily, there is the contention that Japan's limits of endurance are far from reached; that Japan has yet to draw upon desperation in calling up wealth and determination. At the same time, Japan's efforts to break China financially have failed. Nothing is judged more remarkable than China's preservation of the stability of her currency.

There is the argument that China now has a unique advantage in the war, in that there is no longer any actual front; in that Japan is more than ever in the position of jabbing at an enormous jellyfish, without actual, positive goals. China's new "mobile" attack, with emphasis on guerilla warfare, is held to be vicious, devastating.

But it can be argued, as well, that the Japanese are not incapable in the long run of dealing with guerilla warfare, that it cannot be assumed that the Chinese are always victorious in this type of warfare. And reduction of the war to guerilla-stalemate gives Japan some chance at least to recuperate.

Will to Resist Still Strong

It goes as unquestionable that the Chinese will resist is still intact; that China's military achievement, in holding out this long, is evidence of a new spirit of unity and purpose; that China is still not beaten.

In Shanghai, Chinese bow low before Japenese sentries. In Canton, Chinese coolies wearing Japanese servants kimonos paste up posters announcing the glory of a new China. But in the still unconquered China soldiers are training, and the populace shares in a new mobilization of manpower and enthusiasm.

Japanese hopes that Chinese resistance would crumple with the fall of Hankow and Canton have not worked out. Japan has tossed enormous amount of money into the gamble for a new empire. Japan guessed wrong her assumptions of a quick victory, of ability to gain Chinese co-operation, of power to crush Chiang Kai-shek.

Yet the stubborn patience of the Japanese cannot be minimized. Japan still has an army and its navy is intact. There is no really authentic indication that Japan cannot carry on for a long time to come.

It is widely assumed that Japan would like peace, or a cessation of hostilities. It is as widely assumed that China has no desire for peace with sacrifice. What it all boils down to is that the chances of the Sino-Japenese hostilities remaining a private war seem very slim.

International Kaleidoscope: Correspondence From Foreign Capitals

Hitler Coup Ends Faith In Nazi Word

French Are Losing Munich Illusions; Fear Duce Will Imitate Fuehrer

By John Elliott.

Special Cable to The Post

Paris, March 18.—The Munich policy of appeasement suffered a common death with the Republic of Czecho-Slovakia. This policy was based on the premise that Chancellor Adolf Hitler's promises could be trusted. It was built on the assumption that once "justice" was rendered to the Sudeten Germans, Hitler himself would respect the right of self-determination of the Czechs.

Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain and Premier Edouard Daladier took Der Fuhrer at his word when he said that with the incorporation of the Sudetenland in the Third Reich he no longer had any territorial claims to present in Europe.

These illusions have now been ruthlessly destroyed by the Nazi Chancellor's action in wiping Czech-Slovakia off the map. The rulers of Britain and France have had brought home to them what they should have known when Ethiopia was conquered and the League of Nations collapsed—that the law of the jungle prevails in Europe and force alone counts. Observers are asking, "Why bother to call an international conference?" since any agreements that might be arrived at there would be observed by Chancellor Hitler only so long as it suited his interests.

The so-called Franco-German "peace" declaration of December 6, which French Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet and his friends heralded as the beginning of a new era in Europe has now been shown to be only a scrap of paper. For why should France regard Hitler's renunciation of Alsace-Lorraine as any more binding than his pledge to respect Czecho-Slovakia?

Although the Franco-German declaration engaged both governments to consult each other on matters of common interest, Hitler moved his troops into Czecho-Slovakia without saying a word to the French or the British. He completely ignored them.

Object Lesson To Eastern Europe

He gave the nations of eastern Europe a striking object lesson of the impotence of the Western democracies in that part of the continent, and a warning that if they should be foolish enough to rely on their help they would run the serious risk of sharing the fate of the Negus, Haile Selassie of Abyssinia, Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria, President Eduard Benes of Czecho-Slovakia and Premier Juan Negrin of Spain.

For France the destruction of Czecho-Slokavia is especially humiliating. The country was bound to come to the aid of the Czechs not only by the obligations of the League Covenant, but by a treaty of alliance. A little more than a year ago Yvon Delbos, then French foreign minister, called Czecho-Slovakia "an extension of France in the East," and last September his successor, Georges Bonnet, solemnly reaffirmed France's obligations to the Czech Republic at Point-de-Grace.

Yet the French government has watched the Germans everrun their most loyal ally without uttering even a word of protest. The Czechs did not even think it worth their while to call on the French for help, and as Pertinax (Andle Geraud, noted French political writer) truly remarks: "Their silence measures the depths of our degradation."

The consequences of the annexation of Czecho-Slovakia by the Third Reich presage dark days for the Third Republic. It is not only the material assets that Hitler has gained that matter—the Skoda Works at Pilsen, the 1,000 tanks, the 1,500 airplanes, the $81,000,000 worth of gold of the Czechs' national bank and the elimination of a dangerous military threat on Germany's flank.

Encouragement To Mussolini

The menace lies even more in the encouragement that Chancellor Hitler has given to Premier Benito Mussolini to go and do likewise. While the junior member of the Rome-Berlin axis has been reaping a rich harvest Il Duce has still to cash in on the partnership. But it is not likely that he has acquiesced in Hitler's domination of Central Europe without a promise of German support for his own claims in the Mediterranean.

In a few weeks—perhaps after Generalissimo Franco has taken Madrid—the French now fear with reason that Mussolini may call upon their country to stand and deliver—Tunis, Djibouti, Corsica and Nice. Furthermore, if Gen. Franco had any doubts as to which side his bread is buttered they must have been dispelled by Hitler's brilliant coup. The Spanish nationalist leader is not likely now to run down an invitation to join the anti-Comintern bloc, especially if he is bribed with the promise of Gibraltar, Tangiers and French Morocco in the event of a successful war.

France, therefore, is now faced with the prospect of receiving an ultimatum from three neighboring fascist states. If she does not comply with their demands she is theatened with an invasion on three sides—a situation this country has not had to meet since the days of Napoleon.

Hitler Has Built Biggest Germany; Maps Show How

Greater Germany's eastward march has given her an area and population exceeded in Europe only by Soviet Russia. Only Russia and the United States, of western countries, have greater populations. Greater Germany's population is now twice that of France proper; twice Italy's, and more than that of the British Isles, Canada and Australia combined. These maps show the territorial growth of the greatest Germany in history:

The Germany ruled by Kaiser Wilhelm II, before the World War.

She lost territory to France, Belgium, Poland, Danzig, Denmark, and Czecho-Slovakia after the close of the war.

The Saar basin (arrow) voted to return to the Reich (1935). On March 12, 1938, German troops, "to restore peace," entered Austria, and it was joined to the Reich.

Hitler added the western mountain rim (Sudetenland) of Czecho-Slovakia to the Reich on the ground that its German residents had been treated unfairly by the Czechs.

Hitler took Moravia and Bohemia into the Reich March 15 as an autonomous protectorate and made Slovakia a protectorate the next day. (The eastern tip of the former Czecho-Slovak republic, Carpatho-Ukraine, was annexed by Hungary.)

Italians Ask When Their Turn Is Coming

So Far, Hitler Has Reaped All Axis Benefits; Mussolini's Chance Seems to Be 'Now or Never'

By James M. Minifie.

Rome, March 18.—When will Italy's turn come to do a little remaking of the map of the world in the interests of her natural aspirations? Will it be advanced or retarded by Germany's gobbling up of Czecho-Slovakia? These questions are asked here with increasing insistence.

A week before the German advance on Prague the Italian-inspired commentators were indicating that the time was coming for the presentation of the Italian demands. General expectation was agreed it was Italy's turn following the German triumph at Munich.

The colonial jackpot schemes in which the Rome-Berlin axis and its friends should obtain colonial holdings at the expense of the present possessors there adumbrated by Virginio Gayda, newspaper spokesman of the Italian foreign office. All appeared set for a drive in the Mediterranean, although as pointed out by this correspondent last week, there were certain factors, such as the lack of oil reserves, that suggested the move would not come immediately.

Meantime, Germany has moved. Evidence points to the prior discussion, with Italian approval, of the plan for the dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia, but the incorporation of Bohemia and Moravia by Germany appears to have been unanticipated. Certainly until Wednesday morning—the day the Germans announced the absorption of the Czechs—the Italian press had anticipated only the establishment of Slovakia and possibly Ruthenia as independent of Prague.

Seems Mussolini Was Mistaken

There is no question that Premier Benito Mussolini had no idea six months ago of the possibility of the incorporation of a new area and a foreign race and language by Germany, or he would not have written his famous letter to Lord Ruciman in September, in which he said:

"If Chancellor Adolf Hitler claimed and annexed 3,500,000 Czechs, Europe would be justified in getting excited and acting. But Hitler is not thinking of that. The writer of this letter is in position to tell—confidentially—if someone offered 3,500,000 Czechs to Hitler, he would gracefully but resolutely decline such a present. Der Fuehrer is concerned with 3,500,000 Germans and solely therewith."

This makes curious reading now, particularly in connection with the repeated assurances of Hitler last fall that Germany had no further territorial ambitions. The Italian editorialists dutifully write: "Since the Italo-German frontier is pledged forever, Italy regards Germany's marvelous fulfillment of a great destiny with sympathy."

Already the average Italian with whom the Italo-German alliance has never been popular is beginning to say: "But what trust can be placed in the most solemn pledges of such a man who can break them so quickly?" Then he turns to the map and observes with certain uneasiness how closely the southern tip of Germany approaches the Mediterranean—the border is only 60 miles as the crow flies from the Italian port of Trieste, which was formerly Austrian. How soon is Germany going to demand, or rather take, a port on the Mediterranean? These are disturbing questions.

Italy Has No Benefits From Axis

If the situation was unpopular before the close Italo-German connections were established, it is doubly so now in view of the demonstrated untrustworthiness already proved by the unscrupulousness of the German leader combined with the fact that Italy has not received anything by the association.

It was summed up last spring by a joke current after the introduction of the goose-step in the Italian army.

"What is the result of the Rome-Berlin axis?"

"We got the Passo Romano (Fascist goose-step); they got Passo Do Brennero (Brenner Pass)."

Hence observers here believe the Italian authorities now are faced with the necessity of Italy's benefits from the axis by setting afoot a drive of their own for "natural aspirations." Something spectacular is needed to impress public opinion. Unfortunately Germany's hands are tied for the moment by the Czech development, which at the same time has further hardened foreign opposition to pressure tactics.

When Italy tries them she likely will be confronted with a world completely fed up with these methods. But if she waits for world opinion to reconcile itself to the absorption of the Czechs, Italy runs the risk of finding her chosen victim's armament at a point which would make Munich methods dangerous.

The fact is, now is the golden opportunity and Germany has taken it. Many believe Italy will not wait long before trying to achieve expansion herself, despite the increased difficulties caused by the German move. It is now or never, these persons believe.

Cause of Czech Freedom Has U. S. Sympathy

Forces for Independence Expected to Rally Here as in 1918

States to play so important a role in the shaping of the first Czecho-Slovak republic are still at work in this country; the warm sympathy for any freedom-loving people whose struggle can be compared to our own American Revolution and a sense of comradeship with any people bound to an important element of this country's population by racial ties.

Without these factors, of course, Col. Hurban's bold resistance to Nazi pressure would be an insignificant, isolated gesture. But in the circumstances the minister without a country becomes an heroic figure, a minister with a cause.

That Col. Hurban's new credentials will not go unhonored in this country was clearly indicated by Friday's developments at the State Department. First officials conferred and, presumably, agreed with the Czech minister on his uncompromising rejection of the demand that he surrender the legation to the German Embassy.

Loss of Freedom "Temporary"

It was only a few hours later that Sumner Welles, acting Secretary of State, issued his crushing indictment of Nazi Germany's "wanton lawlessness." For Col. Hurban, and the cause he represents, the most significant words were these:

"This Government, founded upon and dedicated to the principles of human liberty and of democracy, cannot refrain from making known this country's condemnation of the acts which have resulted in the temporary extinguishment of the liberties of a free and independent people . . ."

The doctrine of nonrecognition is no novelty in American foreign policy. Within the present decade it has been invoked to express this country's disapproval of Japan's seizure of Manchuria and the Italian conquest of Ethiopia. But the defiant assertion that the flame of liberty has undegrone only "temporary extinguishment" in Czecho-Slovakia gives unparalleled severity to America's refusal to recognize the latest Nazi conquest. The phrase is a clear invitation to Col. Hurban to remain in the United States and rally forces for a new struggle for Czecho-Slovak freedom.

came the recognized leader of the Arab refugees from Tripoli.

Many of his followers have enlisted in the French native forces in Tunis. Others—hard-riding Arabs of the vast back country deserts—keep in touch with his organization in the hope that some day they may return to their homes in Libya.

Camel Cavalry To Harass Enemy

If it comes to a fight, modern machines of war and modern fighting men will give and take the big shock on the frontier between French Tunisia and Italian Libya. But, far to the south, where Libya touches Algeria and French West Africa across the trackless Sahara Desert, camel cavalry will find plenty of work to do.

Mounted on racing camels, cavalrymen under French officers will navigate the deserts, raiding enemy outposts, scouting for signs of enemy raids, harassing the enemy's flanks with midnight attacks. Camel cavalrymen form a regular part of the French Army. In peacetime, they are the gendarmes of the Sahara.

Many of their officers are young Frenchmen who seek solitude and forgetfulness in the deserts after adventurous beginnings in continental France.

Wearing French uniforms under colorful burnooses, the officers ride their camels barefoot like the dark-skinned Saharan tribesmen they command. Piloting themselves by the stars at night, by the sun in daytime, camel cavalrymen can follow a trail across the sands like an American Indian stalking his enemy through the forests.

Discoveries Fill Gap in India History

Simla, India, March 19 (I.N.S.).—A gap in history has been filled by recent excavations of the archeological survey of India in Rewa, Central India.

They reveal that 2,000 years ago India had gymnasia and that physical culture was common among her people.

Twenty-three inscriptions, hitherto known, mostly of the third and fourth centuries of the Christian era, have been brought to light. They relate to a period admittedly one of the darkest in Indian history, namely that between the disappearance of the Kushan Empire and the rise of the Gupta kings.

The language of most of these inscriptions is mixed Pakrit and Sanskrit, and the script is Brahmi, prevalent over 1,600 years ago. The dates given in the inscriptions range from the year 51 to 90 of an unspecified era.

The names of three rulers of little known dynasty, Maharaja Visithiputra Bhimasena (year 51), his son Maharaja Kochhiputa Fothasiri (years 86 to 87), and his son Maharaja Kosikputa Battadeva (year 90).

So far only one inscription of the first named ruler was known from a seal found at Bhita in the Allahabad district.

Besides the rulers and their ministers, merchants and guilds from far off cities like Kausambi, Mathura and Parvata, figured among the donors of cave dwellings, wells, reservoirs of water and gardens for public use, the finds revealed.

Hungary Tries to Stem Nazi Drive By Seizing Carpotho-Ukraine

Hitler Rejected Her Claim to That Region at Munich

By Tabor Bartok.

Will the swift and determined move of Hungary in seizing the Carpatho-Ukraine during the Nazi-inspired break-up of Czecho-Slovakia last week, throw up a barrier against the Nazi drive to the East? Now that Hungary and Poland have the common frontier they have been clamoring for, is it possible for them to halt the Nazi juggernaut on its eastward march?

Hungary put in her claim to the Carpatho-Ukrainian region at Munich, but Hitler decided otherwise. Three powers at Munich did not oppose Hungarian annexation of this easterly corner of Czecho-Slovakia, in prewar days a part of the land of the Magyars.

To Chamberlain and Daladier it was only a trifle, and Mussolini gladly seized the opportunity to show his friendliness toward Hungary in the course of the poker game which strongly played all chips into the hands of Hitler. But Hitler said no.

Count Csaky, who hurriedly arrived in Munich to argue for the Hungarian claims personally, was not even admitted to the conference. In the claims of Hungary, the City of Pozsony (or Bratislava as the Czecho-Slovaks call it) was very prominently included; but again—as it was told to the Hungarians—it was Hitler who opposed the Magyar claims to this historic Hungarian town, and according to his wishes it was made capital of the Slovak autonomous state—the center last week of Slovak uprising against the Czechs.

Importance of Bratislava

Obviously, Hitler considered this town a strategic point—an outlet to the River Danube on which German soldiers hurriedly fortified two villages (included in the Sudetenspoil)—one south and one north of Bratislava. The Hungarians secretly cherished the hope at that time that Bratislava would soon fly the Hungarian colors, and the overwhelming Hungarian population of the city clamored for weeks to join Hungary in the course of the Sudeten crisis. This may be one overlooked reason for the Slovak uprising, and submission to German protectorate. The fear of the Slovaks that finally they might lose out against Hungarian clamor, was perhaps one of the resons why they submitted to German domination.

In the light of events of the last week, the role played by the City of Bratislava in the Sudeten crisis, may offer an explanation for the attitude of the Slovaks, and the change, or seemingly brewing change of the attitude of Hungary toward Germany. Count Teleky, the present Prime Minister of Hungary, is the man who upon taking office recently, dissolved the headquarters of the Hungarian Nazis. And the foreign minister of the Teleky cabinet is the same Count Csaky, who, as head of the Hungarian delegates in Munich, was ignored and finally forced to accept a humiliating half-solution.

While the firm stand of Prime Minister Count Teleky against the Nazi organizations of the country, showed the determination of the Hungarian government to preserve her independence in internal affairs, the present swift move in the Carpatho-Ukraine toward a common frontier with Poland—so strongly opposed by Hitler only less than six months ago—offers at least food for speculation that perhaps the Magyars are trying to regain their independence in foreign affairs also.

It is true that, according to latest dispatches from Berlin, "it was indicated that Germany would not oppose establishment of a Hungarian-Polish frontier if the Hungarians are able to establish one in their present drive." But this negative "O. K." of Hitler's and the lack of aid for the drive, offers more than one way of reasoning.

According to one theory, Hitler's "carte-blanche" offered to Hungary, means that he accepted the arguments of the Magyars—that full solution can only be reached in this region if the annihilation of Carpatho-Ukraine by Hungary is fulfilled.

The other theory would admit that Hitler knows Hungary is safely in the German orbit, and therefore, he is not afraid of the Hungarian resistance, with or without common Hungarian-Polish frontiers.

"Mission" to Stop Eastern Drive

According to the third explanation, Hungary is not only trying to regain her independence from Germany, but she is determined to fufill a mission, by seeking common frontiers with Poland, in order to throw a corridor against the too vigorous German gravitation toward the East. As to the "mission" on Hungary's part, it is interesting to recall the Hungarians like to point proudly to the fact that for centuries, Hungary was the strongest bulwark of the West against the Turkish invasion from the East.

In his drive to the East, Hitler has ruthlessly invaded Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, and as a forerunner of military invasion, Nazi propaganda is invading Hungary, Jugoslavia and Rumania.

It would seem natural that these countries should have formed a strong united front against the German invasion. However, conditions directly traeable to after-war treaties put great difficulties in the way of such a bond.

Czecho-Slovakia's birth certificate was written on these treaties. It emerged after these treaties had added to it territories which had previously belonged to Hungary. Hungary's claims for territorial revision, and Czecho-Slovakia's rigid objection to them have retarded any approachment between these two countries.

In the South and the East, Hungary's frontiers face Jugoslavia and Rumania respectively—both beneficiaries of her territorial losses due to the after-war treaty; and impatience with Hungarian minorities within the borders of both countries still presents grave obstacles.

We must add to this—that Hungary is overwhelmingly an agricultural country, and she had to find markets for her surplus output derived from natural resources. Germany is and was the best customer for Hungarian agricultural products and Hungary therefore presents an extensive market for German-made goods. This state of affairs had practically driven Hungary into Germany's clutches, from which it cannot so easily escape.

Until recently Hungary also cherished the hope that a strong Germany would destroy the status quo, and would open the gateways before Hungarian revisionist aspirations. But even the most ardent supporters of German-Hungarian cooperation recognized as far back as 1937 the dangers of the vigorous Germna drive to the East.

Maygars Talk Of 'Mission' to Stop Hitler March

Resistance to Germany Rises

The year 1937 marked the first sign of Hungarian resistance against Germany. Responsible statesmen raised their voices in Parliament on this matter, and Tibor Eckhardt, the leader of the small land owners, made the most dramatic appeal when he asserted that—"we must recognize that the German Nazi-revolution is not over yet, and we must watch the non-official factors of Germany, the Nazi-party, and other organizations which are trying to inject into the life of Hungary their strange ideologies. We must openly state that we do not want to become Nazified, and we do not want to become the Ostmark of Germany."

This resistance against the Nazification of Hungary weakened considerably after Munich. No matter how great a danger was involved in the close cooperation between the two countries, this was the time lost sight of in Hungary's joyful celebration over the repossession of her former territories in connection with the dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia.

Perhaps this pause in Hungary's resistance was mistaken for weakness by Germany, and not without reason. Did not Hungary's premier, Imredy, introduce measures of Nazification along the Nurnberg lines, all due to an intensified Nazi pressure from Berlin? Since then, Imredy himself has fallen, a victim of the racial theory; his downfall was not only due to his Jewish extraction, but also to very strong opposition to measures introduced by him.

Can Hungary Stop Hitler?

Did Hitler commit an error at Munich by withholding his approval for the joint Polish-Hungarian frontier? Or, was it an even greater slip on his part, and a more severe offense against Hungarian pride, that he blocked the attempts to return Bratislava, the old historic city of the Magyars, to the mother country?

Or, has the Nazi-danger become so acute in Hungary that they recognize the fact that even if they might regain other territories with the aid of Germany, it would only mean that the German "colonization" of Hungary would become more coveted by Hitler?

Or, is it that the old Hungarian dislike for German thoroughness with which they pursue their own interests, is aroused to such a height that the government feels strong enough, backed by public opinion, to call a "stop" to the German aggression?

Or, has the present Czecho-Slovak turmoil and the role played in it by Hitler, revealed to the Hungarians that Hitler is playing the old game—creating restlessness, distrust and antagonism between the different nationalities, in order to fish in troubled waters and to strengthen his own rule over them?

Only future events will give an accurate answer to these questions. But, should Hungary, the least suspected of all countries, offer such a resistance, commonly with Poland—and succeed, Hitler would not be the first foreign ruler whose might was shattered by the determination of the two freedom-loving countries—Poland and Hungary—a determination to defend their right to independence.

Schacht Attends Performance of Exiled Artists

Lucerne, March 18 (INS).—Swiss newspapers report with unconcealed astonishment that Dr. Hjalmar Schacht attended a performance at the Lucerne State Theater starring Germany's leading emigrant artists, Albert Basserman and his Jewish wife Else Basserman.

Dr. Schacht enthusiastically applauded the refugee artists but refused to tell reporters whether he intended to remain permanently abroad. He later said he was spending his vacation in Switzerland.

Japan Faces Staggering War Budget

Conflict Costly, but Nation Will Make Any Sacrifices for 'Economic Security'

By Relman Morin.

Special Cable to The Post.

Tokyo (Correspondence of The Associated Press).—Japan's balance sheet at this stage of her military adventure is a study in scarlet.

Nearly all entries are outgo. Income still is in the expectation stage. Nearly all resources of the nation have been drawn upon. Japan is in the red so deeply that sober-minded Japanese economists are talking of striking the balance in terms of 50 or 100 years, rather than of one or five years. An accounting would show:

Accounting of Grains and Losses

Human losses—Between 75,000 and 100,000 Japanese youths killed, number wounded hospitals choked with the maimed, the blind. (To make no mention of China's staggering losses—estimated at as many at 1,000,000 lives—or the intangible cost in human grief and misery).

ECONOMIC LOSSES—Japan has appropriated for the war in China and for the maintenance of her land and sea forces at the rate of about $5,000,000 a day since the conflict began July 7, 1937. Recently the army and navy announced that appropriations at approximately the same rate would be asked up to March 31, 1940, although China operations no longer are on the same scale as though the first 18 months of the war.

(There is no certainty that all funds voted for the China "incident" actually have been expended on that adventure. Some informed observers believe much has gone for munitions being piled up for a war against Soviet Russia or into a secret war chest for such a conflict.)

This in the face of a foreign trade decline of 21 percent, entailing the loss of markets Japan may never regain and the crippling of industries that may never be revived.

POLITICAL LOSSES—She has incurred China's hatred, which may persist for generations, and has aroused fear and distrust in the United States, Britain and France, directly, and in a score of smaller nations, indirectly. She has drawn on herself charges of treaty-breaking and bad faith. She has given powerful impetus to the world's arms building competition.

GAINS—These still are largely in the shape of exceptions not discountable in the world's money markets. But Japan has occupied most of eastern China with its industrial, financial and communications machinery, enabling her to make some trade advances and in a measure exclude foreign competition, leading to hopes of much larger gains in future.

The China war has been a relatively costly enterprise although Japan, with her plentiful supply of cheap manpower, wages war much more cheaply than most occidental nations could. That Japan, comparatively poor, has been able to carry the load has been due almost entirely to the unquestioning patriotism of her people, their willingness to pinch and deprive themselves and pay mounting taxes. This has been the principal factor in the confounding of the ortodox economists who said Japan could not finance a six months' wah.

The pinch is showing today in some curious places for instance, the government allotment of tennis balls—for some 1,500,000 players—was 50 dozen in February. A Japanese schoe store recently advertised: "Limited orders for all-leather shoes are again being accepted."

Japan Hopes to Get—Security

What Japan hopes to get in return for the China campaign is security. She wants complete economic and financial independence, freedom from the possibility that any nation or group of nations can bring pressure on her by withholding vital raw materials or excluding her from vital markets. She sses in China's millions a vast market for her finished products and in China's wide territory a cornucopia to supply all her industrial needs.

"The world has become an agglomeration of tight-economic blocs. The British Empire is one. The United States is another. They can subsist without a cent of foreign trade. If necessary, their own market could support their industries and their own natural resources could supply them. Neither needs any outside assistance, particularly in these times of emergency. That is what Japan is determined to have."

In the military sense, Japan's geographical position and her first-rate army and navy already have given her a measure of this. No army or group of armies could invade Japan proper successfully. In case of a blockade, she would grow enough rice to feed her people indefinitely.

It is in the economic phase that she has no security. In steel she leans heavily on the United States. There have been years when Japan bocght more scrap steel and iron from America for reamelting than all of the rest of the world combined.

In off-the-record talks on replies to American notes protesting Japan's closing of the open door to trade in China, Japanese have said in substance:

Before 1932, Japan saw Manchuria as the answer to this problem. But Manchurian iron has been a disappointment. There are thousands of tons of it sitting near Manchukuo furnaces while Japan continues to import—the inference being that the native pig iron is too expensive or too poor in quality, or both. Coal is another essential. Tin, cotton, chemicals and above all, oil, are others. The list is a long one.

Japanese leaders believe that without these materials their nation is not truly independent. They hope that China will supply them all. If China does, and if Japan can get them out, her "East Asia bloc" will be a self-sufficient unit in the world's economy.

U. S. Seeks Ways to Help South American Countries Arm

Congress Debates Sale to South America of—

If We Don't, Europe Will, Experts Say

But Do We Have The Facilities, While Arming Ourselves?, Congress Asks

By J. Gilbert Norris.

Just four months ago the world was shocked by a new outbreak in Europe, and as the United States recoiled from the racial persecutions in Germany, President Roosevelt announced a new national defense policy for the United States, based on an armed and united continent ready to repel aggression from abroad.

This week, as again the dictators were on the march, the first concrete step toward fulfillment of a joint hemisphere defense was put before Congress by the Administration. Resolutions were presented in both the Senate and House to authorize the United States to aid other American republics arm, by constructing warships and other munitions in our navy yards and arsenals.

Measure to Give Help Contemplated

The measure, introduced by Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, ranking Democrat on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, after consultation with the State, War and Navy Departments, contemplates the manufacture of anti-aircraft, coast defense guns and ammunition as well as naval vessels "at cost" in Government plants.

In addition, the United States would repair such equipment and could furnish Latin-American nations with plans, specifications and technical assistance for constructing warships and arms in their own yards and arsenals.

See Opposition To Giving Secrets

The resolutions specifically authorize the War and Navy Departments to transmit secret plans to our neighbors to the south, but there will be serious opposition in those departments to letting out any real secrets involving latest design equipment.

That is the picture of the Administration's latest co-operative defense move. Previously, its efforts to assist the democracies of Europe to rearm against the totalitarian states brought on a storm of criticism from a minority bloc in the Senate. Nothing else came of the protest, however, and the Gallup Poll, published in The Post last Sunday, showed a majority of Americans favoring the President's course.

Expect Committee Report This Week

While a few members of the "isolationist bloc" in Congress have declared themselves against the Pittman resolution, little actual opposition has been voiced as yet. And according to its sponsor in the Senate, it will be reported by the Foreign Relations Committee this week.

The only question raised is: Can the United States undertake the construction of ships and heavy arms for South America without interfering with its own armament plans?

The first answer to this question came rather inadvertently from a naval official. Testifying before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee on the construction of naval air bases, Rear Admiral Ben Moreell, chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, was questioned regarding the capacity of United States shipyards, and was widely quoted as stating that American naval and commercial yards will be filled with United States Navy and Merchant Marine craft for the next ten years.

The day following Moreell's testimony, however, Admiral Leahy appeared in executive session before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in support of the Pittman resolution and was said to have stated that American yards can take care of the South American construction without interfering with the Navy's program. This declaration will be made publicly on Wednesday when the Admiral, Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles and Brig. Gen. George C. Marshall, deputy chief of staff, will again appear to make their statements for the plan "on the record."

Navy Interprets Statement Differently

At the same time, the Navy Department released a statement declaring that Admiral Moreell's testimony had been misinterpreted.

"Read Admiral Moreell's testimony was to the effect that the facilities now available in navy yards will probably be taxed within a period of two years if work is carried on in accordance with the Navy's ten-year building program," the department said.

"'It is possible, however, to increase the capacity of U. S. Naval industrial plants if it should be desirable to do so, and therefore, if South American republics should request that ships be built in this country it will be possible to build them both in Government yards and in commercial shipbuilding plants with existing facilities in some cases, and by extending existing facilities in others."

While something may be made of these statements by opponents of the plan, the facts indicate clearly that with some expansion of both Government and commercial yards and perhaps some additional naval construction allocated to private yards, construction of South American warships can be accommodated in navy yards without interference with the Navy's program.

More Than 100 Ways Reported

No official information is available as to the number of shipbuilding ways in Government and private yards or as to the extent to which they are filled. More than a year ago, the U. S. Maritime Commission made a survey of private shipyards in this country. It was reported that there were 26 yards with a total capacity of 106 ways, and that at that time there were 15 ways in 6 yards available for immediate building. This situation is not materially changed, officials state, although more of the ways are occupied by new construction and less with overhaul jobs.

Figures as to ways in navy yards are kept secret by the Navy, but it is understood that there are about 15 in all, not including 30 dry docks.

At any rate, the extent to which existing ways are filled is not a true criterion of the Nation's shipbuilding capacity. While admittedly they are nearly filled or being held open for expected work, the key to the situation lies elsewhere.

Dry-docks have been used for the construction of naval vessels, and while it is not economical to tie up the repair facilities with long construction jobs, this can be done. In the case of smaller vessels, ways can be improvised. At one time, four cutters were laid down in one large dock.

The point, therefore, is not in the number of actual ways, which are nothing, but inclined planes supported by scaffolding, but in the machine shops and power facilities. Forges, large boring bars, milling machines, large lathes and electric shops—their adequateness governs the capacity of a shipyard far more than the actual number of ways.

And under a $55,000,000 program inaugurated last year by the Navy serious deficiencies in such equipment are being met. The equipment added will be more than sufficient for the existing ways. That is, many of the machines being acquired are necessary but will not be used to capacity by any means. Given available land, as is the case in most of the yards, the actual construction docks for moderate size vessels can be installed in a short time and at not great expense.

Apprentices Now Being Named

The real "bottle-neck" lies in shortage of trained personnel. Naval architects, marine engineers, and skilled workmen in the shipbuilding trades cannot be found overnight. The long period of stagnation in ship construction from 1922 to 1932 brought about a definite shortage in these fields.

But steps are already under way to meet this problem. The Navy has initiated a program of "in service" training, as it is called, under which young engineering graduates without specialization in the shipbuilding field are employed in yards and given instruction in shipbuilding, boilers and engines, marine electrical work, ordinance, etc.

In addition, the number of apprentices for the critical ship trades has been increased, and helpers and laborers are being trained in the simpler artisan duties. Commercial yards are following suit.

Because the training of naval architects and marine engineers requires much more preparation than the skilled trades, the Maritime Commission is endeavoring to establish more naval engineering schools in leading universities. The commission, it was revealed this week, has asked George Washington University to provide such course so that local engineers can attend its night course and prepare for shipbuilding work. It is understood that the university plans such courses.

The building of war planes is not involved in the Pittman resolution, for, except for a small experimental Navy factory in Philadelphia, aircraft manufacture is carried on in this country solely by private industry. However, our airplane plants are already selling planes to Latin America, and the whole plan of cooperation with South America contemplates increasing such orders.

Private Arsenal Industry to Help

It is planned that the Army will assist South American countries in the purchase of artillery in this country. Our Government arsenals are not of sufficient scope to produce all the Army's needs in normal times, and under the project-expansion program private industry will turn out about three-quarters of the new equipment.

However, the final assembly of the anti-artillery guns and other weapons is usually done in the Government arsenals, and Army officials state that they could handle the Latin-American orders, giving them the benefits of their inspection service, assemblage of units at cost and the lower price resulting from the large orders involved. The War Department is opposed to any enlargement of its arsenals, either for its own needs or for foreign business, desiring to keep the private munitions alive. In wartime, it is pointed out, private industry must supply at least 90 per cent of our munitions.

Besides antiaircraft gun and coast artillery rifles, Latin-American nations will probably be seeking new small cruisers, destroyers and gunboats. Their orders could not be large. According to the latest League of Nations report the total American naval forces, exclusive of the United States, consisted of only 6 small battleships, 10 cruisers, 43 destroyers, 17 submarines, 23 gunboats and 4 coast defense ships. The Latin nations would be replacing only a portion of these each year, and even under an expanded building program the total would not be large.

U. S. to Offer Better Arms Bargains

But what, then, if the other American fleets are so small, does their strength matter, compared to the large naval powers of the world, the reader may ask. The point is, and this is the gist of the whole matter, high construction costs of warships and other arms in the United States have forced the Latin Americas to go to Europe. We want to offer them a better bargain here by building their fighting equipment in our Government yards at actual cost.

It may be that this will mean more American warships being built in private shipyards to make navy yard space available for South American craft. Recently, contracts for four new light cruisers were allocated to commercial yards, on the order of the President, instead of the usual division of such work. Naval officials state that this arrangement had nothing to do with the Pittman plan, but it shows what can be done.

Some objections may be made to such procedure if adopted by the Navy, but if the United States is to prevent South American shipbuilding and armament orders from going to the totalitarian states, which can underbid our manufacturers, something must be done. And many thinking Americans hold that it is vitally important for the United States, rather than Germany or Italy, to assist Latin America to arm.

If we do, it will mean that their governments will be in close cooperation with ours on defense matters instead of with the chancellories and war offices of Europe. Continental solidarity will come from friendly political, economic and defense relations. Only by being "good neighbors," maintaining satisfactory trade relations and coordinating defense forces, can totalitarian inroads be prevented.

Period of Stagnation In Ship Construction Left U. S. Without A Trained Personnel

CCC Today Has Much to Show for Its Work

By William M. Pinkerton,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

The young man in ragged clothes stared a long time at the green blotter. Then he glanced up and wet his lips.

"Look," coaxed the red-headed kid on the other side of the desk, "You don't have to give your right name. Just give me a name. I got to have a name for the books. They won't check up on you. Nobody gives his right name, anyway." He changed his tone.

"No name, no stay here, see. You don't want to go to that county place. I tell you its terrible—drunks and bats, dirt, bum food, rats all over the place. You don't want to go there, do you?"

The two strangers had a common bond. They were "depression bums" in the cold winter of 1934. They were in a transient camp in the Midwest.

It wasn't much. Nobody knew his neighbor. They got plain food and a bare bunk with one slim blanket. All day they sat around the assembly hall—"sniping" butts from the dirty floor to piece out a slim tobacco ration in their roll-your-owns. And listening to old men gripe about life.

There were lots of boys on the road that winter. They rode the rods in gangs or singly. Many had left broken homes, where nerve-sick parents worried over jobless mouths to feed.

But back in the city streets and village pool-halls, word was spreading of a new "out" for hopeless youth—the CCC. In those camps, a boy could get three squares and a bunk; eight bucks a month for spending money. And the folks at home got $22.

2,000,000 Boys In Six Years

Now, six years after the Civilian Conservation Corps began, officials no longer call it "relief"—and Congress is talking of making it permanent. Meanwhile, nature had got a New Deal. Tough kids from the Bronx fought back the red death of forest fire. Farm boys from Iowa threw up terraces to hold back the runaway land. Kentucky hillbillies cut brush and laid new roadways in mountain parks. And the cons of cotton pickers planted berry-trees to feed the wild birds.

Some 2,000,000 boys went through the camp discipline, and back again to the world. One-fourth of them left camp for jobs before their terms were up. What happened to the others is a mystery. Camp counselors know many cases of boys who made good; but nobody knows the job-results of CCC as a whole. On Capitol Hill, where everything is figured in votes, some Congressmen count off 5,000-odd former CCC boys in their district—and wonder what they can do with them.

Today, the boys are just citizens; some persons would like to see them welded into a cohesive unit like the American Legion. Attempts to organize the boys in the camps into a national association have been framed on "patriotic" lines. But Assistant Director James J. McEntee has cautioned that "it offers very real potentialities in the nature of a 'racket.'"

One association (dues, $2 a year) projected an increase in pay for enrollees and "military programs" in the camps. Capt. George R. McElroy of the Sixty-third Cavalry called it "nothing but a scheme to gather in $2 in dues," although other reserve officers headed the group. Organizers have had no success with attempts to form a "union" of CCC boys along the lines of the Workers' Alliance.

One of First New Deal Projects

The CCC was one of the first New Deal projects. On the evening of his fifth day as President Franklin D. Roosevelt called five men to his office, and out of their talks came the corps. By July of 1933, 250,000 boys were enrolled.

The "work camp" idea was not new. California had put transient boys into forest camps in 1930. In England, the "hinksey diggers" of Philosopher John Ruskin had been laughed off the Oxford green in 1874. Ruskin later called their 2-mile road the worst in three kingdoms.

"When the CCC was first established in this country," adds Kenneth Holland in his forthcoming book on youth in European labor camps, "work camps had existed in half a dozen European countries for from eight to 13 years." Republican Germany had them long before Hitler's Reich. So did Bulgaria, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries.

In CCC's first months, many were doubters. Youth scoffed at "Boy Scout stuff." Foresters fumed at "wet nursing" kids. Pacifists derided "militarism." Army protested you couldn't run a camp without a guardhouse. Government officials said "it won't work."

But slowly the CCC took form, and in six years the boys have done a job. They planted 1,800,000,000 trees and threw up 4,000 fire towers to protect them. They strung 75,000 miles of telephone from lookout post to watch-tower. They built 132,000 miles of road, and whacked out new playgrounds in the wilderness. They put nearly 5,000,000 check-dams on the hundreds of soil conservation projects demonstrating the new art of keeping the soil on the land. They encouraged the dying breeds of great blue heron and antelope with protected homes.

The corps became a national rescue squad—fighting fires, dyking river banks against flood, hacking order out of the debris left by hurricanes. They went out in squads at night to find lost strangers on the mountainside.

Boys Learned Discipline, Skill

They learned things—first on the job; secondly in school at night. Employers say they like best the discipline, cleanliness and stick-to-it-iveness of the men they hire from CCC. In their eight-hour working day the boys learned skills—how to handle axe and peavie, how to drive and repair a tractor, how to dig a ditch and lay out roads, how to cook, how to nurse the sick.

Foremen in CCC are teachers, too.

The Press Speculates On Democratic Nominee

By Mark Sullivan.

A group of Washington correspondents, talking together the other day, came to some conclusions about the Democratic Presidential nomination next year. All but one agrees that President Roosevelt will not be renominated, and even that dissenter was not very positive. While his heart told him "Roosevelt," his mind told him that the Democrats would go elsewhere.

As the newspaper group passed over Mr. Roosevelt, so did they pass over the other extreme New Dealers. They agreed that Harry L. Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, often supposed to be Mr. Roosevelt's choice to be his heir, has no more chance than Mr. Roosevelt himself, nor as much. By all appearances the Democratic convention next year is likely to be dominated by orthodox Democrats, and they will have none of Mr. Hopkins.

The newspapermen gave some thought to Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, upon his hypothesis that if farm conditions improve during the next 14 months Mr. Wallace might be seen by the Democrats as a candidate who could carry the farming Middle West. But the Democrats are not likely to make their Presidential candidate of a man who, up to 1932, was a Republican. And there are other reasons.

A rather surprising conclusion of the newspapermen was that at this moment Vice President Garner seems in the forefront of possibilities. But this conclusion was for the present only. All thought that other men would come forward. None was very confident that Mr. Garner would be the nominee.

A Texas admirer of Mr. Garner has started an organization to get delegates for him all over the country. Mr. Garner was not consulted about this move, but will not stop it. Yet it is doubtful if he really thinks he will be the nominee. His present conspicuousness is due to the fact that he is the symbol of the opposition to Mr. Roosevelt, the symbol of that portion of the party which thinks that Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal have gone too far in radicalism.

AS A SYMBOL, as a kind of titular head of the opposition to Mr. Roosevelt within the Democratic Party, Mr. Garner is important and effective. The Democrats in the Senate, where he presides, have much confidence in him. So have the Democrats in the House, where Mr. Garner, until he became Vice President, was Speaker, and where he served continuously for 30 years. But it is as a symbol chiefly that Mr. Garner has importance. The active opposition to Mr. Roosevelt in the Senate, the marshaling of votes against his measures, is carried on by other men.

Probably it will be much the same with respect to the Democratic Presidential nomination. Mr. Garner will be a symbol and an effective one. He has an immense acquaintance with Democratic leaders throughout the country. During his years in the House he has sat with perhaps a thousand or two thousand Democratic Representatives. Throughout the country there will be much rallying behind Mr. Garner as a symbol. But after the balloting begins the strength thus held together will probably go to another—to someone who, later on, the conservative Democrats agree upon as their candidate.

Next to Mr. Garner, almost equal to Mr. Garner, the group of newspapermen felt that Secretary of State Cordell Hull has much approval of the kind that often makes Presidential nominees. Both Mr. Hull and Mr. Garner come from the South. And that is a geographical handicap. The Democrats have never, since the Civil War, chosen their Presidential candidate from the South—they know the South will vote Democratic anyhow, and they commonly choose their candidates from doubtful territory.

Mr. Hull, like Mr. Garner, is possibly a little old for the tax upon strength that the Presidency has come to be. Mr. Hull is 67. Mr. Garner is 70. If Mr. Hull were five years younger he would be a strong probability.

AFTER THE NEWSPAPERMEN, in their discussion, got past the names of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Garner and Mr. Hull, they dwelt upon Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri.

But upon this, too, there was a significant lack of strong conviction. Senator Clark comes from one of the important doubtful States and has other attributes that suggest him. Yet the newspapermen, in the backs of their heads, doubt if he will be the nominee. He has been rather conspicuous as an opponent of some of Mr. Roosevelt's most cherished policies.

And among all the conclusions to which the newspapermen came the one in which they were most clearly unanimous and about which they were most certain is this: that the Democratic Presidential nominee next year will not be a man who is definitely unacceptable to Mr. Roosevelt.

The Democrats will not renominate Mr. Roosevelt; they will will not nominate any favorite of his, but, at the same time, they will want his good will. They will want to win the election against the Republicans, and for winning the election Mr. Roosevelt's support of their nominee is vital. They will try to find a man who, without being a New Dealer, someone who has not made a record of opposition to Mr. Roosevelt, is not an anti-New Dealer.

The Democratic problem is: find that man. When the newspapermen tried to find him many of them turned to a dark horse. One dark horse they mentioned is former Gov. McNutt, of Indiana. They also mentioned Senate Leader Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky. And a dark horse who seemed to have many attributes to commend him is Senator Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois. Mr. Lucas, until the present year, was in the House, and there had no responsibility to take a stand on Mr. Roosevelt's court measure—which is the principal test of whether a man is a New Dealer or not. Mr. Lucas comes from a large State and one that in recent years has been doubtful as between the two parties. Altogether, in the dark-horse field, Mr. Lucas is a man to watch.

THROUGHOUT THE TALK of the newspapermen and all the talk of other groups about the Democratic Presidential nomination James A. Farley, Postmaster General and Democratic national chairman, figures in a striking way. That Mr. Farley will have a large hand in choosing the nominee everybody agrees. He may well have a larger hand than any other one individual.

Of the some 1,100 delegates who will make up the Democratic convention possibly half or more will be friends of Mr. Farley—comrades he made when he built up his organization in behalf of Mr. Roosevelt in 1932. These local Democratic leaders throughout the country Mr. Farley has held to him by friendship, by giving them patronage and by giving patronage to friends of theirs. These men will be very loyal to Mr. Farley. If Mr. Farley asks them to support any candidate they will do it. Whomever Mr. Farley favors for the nomination will be a strong candidate.

And there is a good deal of speculation upon whether Mr. Farley might decide to favor himself—whether he might, looking over the situation, decide that he would make as good a Presidential nominee as any other Democrat in sight.

Fencing, the King of Ancient Sports, Grows in Popularity in Washington

Diplomats, Actors, College Students Are Among Practitioners

By Eugene Pomeroy.

The clash of words, the stamp of feet, the war cries "Hola!" and "Touche!" that mark that most warlike of peacetime games, fencing, are becoming increasingly popular in Washington today.

With only about 1,500 fencers in the United States, the Capital boasts half a dozen salles d'armes and a fencers' club nearly 50 years old.

Diplomats, actors, schoolgirls and college students are among the practitioners of this ancient craft whose original raison d'etre was the insult which led to a duel. But today devotees claim it has no peer in the world of pure sport, and as for body building . . . a glance over the physique of some 70-year-oldster who has fenced all his life, noting the straightness of form, the keen eye and quick hand movements, will convince even the most skeptical. And the most skeptical are usually those hardy annuals of the bodily contact sports who tend to look down on the art of fencing as too "arty," verging perhaps on the effeminate. Alas, they have never held a saber or its wooden counterpart, the singlestick, in their hands against so redoubtable a hard hitter as the late Theodore Roosevelt. A man who has done so, Col. Edwin Emerson, vice president of the Fencers' Club, delights to relate how in bouts at the White House gym against the then Chief Executive, he received some terrific body welts from the powerful wielder of the "big stick."

Post Staff Photos.

For its qualities of alertness, keenness and quickness, the ancient craft of fencing is finding increasing favor among the Capital's sports folk. Already Washington boasts 1,500 saber-wielders and a 50-year-old fencers' club. Diplomats, actors, schoolgirls and college students (like those above) are among the practitioners. Hugo Castello and Mrs. Stella Parreck, of the Washington Fencers' Club, show the technique to George Washington University Fencing Club members.

Gen. Wood Liked To Match Singlesticks

The late Gen. Leonard Wood was another of the group which met to match singlesticks and he, too, believed in the heavy hand. Emerson recalls having to soak the basket work hilt of his weapon in a bucket of water for at least 2 hours before a match to save it from splintering under a rain of blows. Nowadays the steel bladed saber has replaced singlesticking in popularity, the reason being that a metal blade bends under a direct thrust while the stiff 3-foot oak or rattan cane of the older weapon often comes too close to leaving a broken rib in its wake.

One reason for the lack of interest in fencing by Americans is the strict code of ceremony which governs it: The salute to opponents and judges before a bout is engaged; the monstrosity of turning your back on an opponent and the principle of give and take when in action. This latter is most essential. The "give" is your parry of the adversary's thrust before counter attacking with your own "riposte." If the attacks should be simultaneous, or nearly so, it lies with the judges to decide which fencer started attacking first and to him goes the point. These are rules annoying to most Americans.

European Ritual Is Even More Strict

In Europe the ritual is even more strict. Pupils study the parries, thrusts and positions for six years before even being permitted to engage in a fencing bout with other pupils, and it takes seven years learning to be awarded a diploma as master of arms. The master alone is permitted a uniform of complete black. His junior, the provost, wears a white jacket and black breeches and the assistant provost is garbed completely in white.

The tradition of fencing in Washington is closely interlocked with the presence of foreign diplomats, many of whom have been trained in the sport since boyhood and continue to find exhilaration in its practice. When in 1896 Henry Gordon Strong, a young Chicago patent lawyer, suggested a fencers club to several members of the old Columbia Athletic Club, which occupied the present Y. M. C. A. Building on G street northwest, it was received with great enthusiasm.

Count Cassini, Russian Ambassador at the time, was unanimously elected president and Ballard Morris, of Forest Glen, Md., then a young attorney in the Government service, was chosen secretary. Members met daily under the tutelage of F. J. Darieulet, a Belgian fencing master who has since coached United States Olympic teams, in the Columbia gymnasium, and later in the various houses and halls the club rented when the athletic organization was forced to close under financial stress.

Top-Hatted Directors Met Once a Month

The club directors met once a month to outline policy. Top-hatted and decked in the most formal attire, even to Ascot ties, the gentlemen would drive up in their coaches: Count Cassini, Ali Ferough Bey, Ambassador from Turkey; Don Luis Corea, Minister from Uruguay, and others now a part of Washington history. The sessions were short and grave, with the young secretary suggesting to the President that such a ruling might be wise or such another assessment necessary. Upon which the President invariably put it to the rest of the board, who invariably passed it without question.

Even in those days before woman suffrage the ladies took an interest in the sport, and twice a week five of them met in the clubrooms, which were theirs to the exclusion of all males but the fencing master.

The great events took place once a year, when the midshipman's team from Annapolis was invited to a meet.

In the presence of President Roosevelt and their distinguished guests the club seems invariably to have won at foil, epee or saber, as the case might be.

The World War, which brought about so many changes in diplomatic circles, carried the Fencers Club before it. Count Cassini was transferred to Spain, the Turkish Ambassador left and most of the young men who had learned how to use a sword were sent to master the art of ducking machine gun enfilades.

Masters Are Teaching New Generation

But today new masters are teaching the tricks of parry and riposte to another generation of Washington and under the guiding hand of the Fencers Club, reorganized in 1933 with Ambassador Colon Alfaro, of Ecuador, at its head, the sport has been broadened to interest schools and colleges and the Y. M. C. A.

There is almost no phase or weapon that you cannot learn. For example, there is Maestro Antonio Messineo, who teaches the Italian school of fence, wherein a stiff forearm is more fundamental than a quick wrist. In the Sala d'Armi Messineo on Randolph street, pupils are taught in a snug little basement room lined with racks of swords and masks. The foils used are a trifle heavier than ordinary French foils and have a cross-bar hilt above the circular guard which permits the manipulator to hook his finger, thus eliminating danger of having the blade whipped from his hand by an opponent. Here also is taught Italian saber, which has won so many Olympic triumphs for the Mediterranean country.

As an added attraction the maestro is an expert with the dagged, a lost art, which was taught him by his grandfather. He makes his own 12-inch blades, beating out on an anvil the 2-inch guards paralleling the blade on the end of each hilt. These guards are for trapping your opponent's weapon. Occasionally in an exhibition match the maestro will fence against a foil—and win every time.

What may be called an American technique is taught by Maj. Edward Dyer at his Salle d'Armes Jacob van Braam on Newark street. The salle is named for George Washington's sword master, and the American technique consists in pupils taking to bouts with each other just as soon as they have learned how to hold a sword.

Jolly Group Assembles To Try a Bit of Bout

Here twice a week a jolly group assembles to try a bit of a bout in the spacious cellar lined with relics of more chivalric ages, including the usual racks of fencing weapons, jackets and gauntlets. And here are casks of good American wine put up by the major every year for the special delectation of his pupils since when the latter came away victorious by one point. The Jewish Community Center has also added several classes in fencing this year.

Son of Famous Fencer Teaches Here

Other masters here are Hugo Castello, son of a famous fencer, who has a large following among the diplomats, and meets at different houses during the week. Darieulet himself, the first instructor of the Fencers Club, comes in to Washington from his home in nearby Maryland once a week to hold private classes.

The universities, too, are beginning to pick up the spirit of the thing, and George Washington, Catholic University and American University all have their devotees under local instructors. George Washington even offers classes for credit.

For some reason girls' schools seem always to have been a focal point for foil fencing and most of the private schools of the District have their weekly classes.

But the "very meat of the matter" is the Fencers Club, with headquarters at Pierce Hall. Members come together once a week to take part in the bouts held on the level sunken floor of the walled (and empty) swimming pool. The gallery watches from above and the weapon racks lining walls of the gallery are sole evidence that this is a salle d'armes.

Deladrier Serves as Maitre d'Armes

Lieut. Clovis Deladrier, Instructor of the Naval Academy midshipmen is maitre d'armes for the club. Occasionally he runs across M. Darieulet and the two may argue the advantage of the body lunge over the pecking technique of the wrist attack. Or they may cross foils, to the delight of an admiring audience, for the "elder swordsmen," as early members of the club are known, are always welcome, both on the mat and in the councils of the organization.

There are as many types of weapons as there are individualities in the fencing world. Besides the three basic weapons, foil, epee and saber we have mentioned the singlestick, the two-handed quarter staff, which plays havoc with head and knuckles, and the dagger.

Another use of the dagger is taught by Don Arturo Nazareno, floor lieutenant of the club and an amateur of repute, who is adept in the sixteenth century use of the weapon. Holding it in the left hand and a rapier, forerunner of the epee, in the right, he uses the short weapon for parrying blows by the long but heavy blade of three centuries ago. This revised art is now practiced by several of Nazareno's pupils here.

Combat With Sabers While on Horseback

Still another phase of the sport is the combat with sabers on horseback. A bout of this type was recently held at Fort Myer with Col. Emerson participating. Plumes are placed atop the usual fencing masks, and the opponent is expected to hack these from his adversary's helm. High slashing cuts to avoid the horses' heads are essential to this joust, and even so the animals become nervous and wary of blows after a time, so that it takes a maximum of horsemanship and maneuvering to establish a chance of winning.

Still another type of fencing is performed with bayonet attached to rifle. This art has its greatest exponent and master in America in Col. Anthony Biddle, U. S. M. C. The short schlager sword of the German universities created yet another form of fencing which approached dueling in the spirit with which it was unertaken and in the cuts it left on head and face.

Out of it all comes the realization that here is a noble art winners roots in the past and the seven types of insult listed by Shakespeare, but in the eyes to the future and the introduction to the American scene of a new and real sport.

If you call the above activity "fencing" you'll be in for a severe reprimanding from devotees of the mask and saber. The technical name is "saber duel on horseback," and the participants are Capt. John Benney, U. S. A., retired (right), and Col. Edwin Emerson. They fought recently on the jousting field of Lord Fairfax Club, near Alexandria, Va. Col. Emerson, who is vice president of the Washington Fencers' Club, used to duel with Theodore Roosevelt and delights to relate about the White House bouts.

Rail Unions Pursue Own Course

until we reach an agreement," which then is presented to individual memberships. The executives union—Harrison emphasizes it is not a federation of unions but of leaders—stemmed from a co-operative group formed in 1920 by heads of brotherhoods to develop a legislative program. Harrison, himself, is president of A. F. of L.'s brotherhood of railway and steamship clerks, freight handlers, express and station employes.

Have Made Strikes Unpopular

It is easy to understand why the brotherhoods proceed cautiously before going on strike. There is lengthy Government mediation and arbitration machinery. Then, too, the brotherhoods know that Federal troops were ordered in the strike of 1877 to keep the mails moving, that President Grover Cleveland called troops out again in 1894 when Eugene V. Debs led the now defunct American Railway Union in the great Pullman strike. Whitney says:

"We have made the strike unpopular by adjusting our grievances through the principles of collective bargaining and mediation and sometimes arbitration, and only have resorted to strikes when we were up against some tough baby looking for a fight.

"In an early day we took the position we would protect our contracts regardless of whether they suited the rank and file at the moment. They represented agreements which should not be violated. That principle has been inculcated in our members, and we have adhered to that. Our members are well disciplined, consequently they do not blow up easily. If it takes six months to adjust a grievance, our people forbear that delay."

In their early days, the constitutions of the "big four" brotherhoods contained no clause calling for collective bargaining. Their prime purpose was insurance; they merely expressed hopes that harmony and amity would mark all dealings with employers.

Hazards to railroaders were great and insurance companies refused to accept the men as normal risks. So the brotherhoods formed their own insurance societies, which today are second in import to the organizations' collective bargaining features. Safety devices since have been made compulsory through the brotherhoods' pressure and insurance rates have been relaxed. Today, the trainmen have $158,000,000 of insurance in force, and the engineers, and firemen and enginemen about $97,000,000 each.

The brotherhoods became gradually more aggressive after the strike of 1894. They fared so well under Government operation of railroads during the World War there was much sentiment among them for continued Government operation.

The Transportation Act of 1920 set up Government machinery to mediate railway labor-management disputes, and was succeeded by the Railway Labor Act of 1926, which was amended in 1934. Present machinery makes the process of calling a national strike a matter of months.

—And the Day of the Egg-rolling Is Near

By Robert C. Albright

The fragile party shell that still incloses hostile factions in the Democratic Party is showing signs of Easter strain.

Never has there been more nimble stepping at the Capitol to avoid breaking the harmony oval before egg-rolling day.

In and out around a half-dozen delicate issues twinkling Democratic toes are dancing and any time now you may hear the crunching sound that means an egg is broken.

Log of the egg-walking marathon—

TAXES:

House and Senate Democrats who believe business is due some tax relief have all but abandoned hope the Administration will get behind their move. But the President hasn't said "No." There may be a few speeches this week just to prod him a bit but still shy of cleavage.

DEBT:

The one Administration proposal that can dynamite all hope of party peace—a $5,000,000,000 increase in the Nation's legal debt limit—was staved off for another week by strategic signaling. If it comes up at all this session, the New Deal is due for its soundest thrashing.

REORGANIZATION:

Due to conciliatory spade-work by Representative Warren, of North Carolina, the battered reorganization bill rolled more or less smoothly through the House only to run smack into the old, familiar issues in the Senate. It will take all of the tempered patience of Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, to steer it unamended through the Senate this week without party grief.

ECONOMY:

The President's request for another $150,000,000 for WPA has distress signals flying from the mast of the House. In the end both factions may compromise on a slight shave, in the interest of peace, of course. In the Senate, the issue will be allowed to cool a while. Senate Majority Leader Barkley and Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, are feuding again on economy and tax issues.

FARM:

The President's slap at the cotton bill of Cotton Senator Smith, of South Carolina, signed a rough road ahead for any farm legislation. Another little item of $250,000,000 for unbudgeted farm parity payments, still sewed up in a House Appropriations sub-committee, holds potential destruction for tax and economy hopes.

MONEY:

The President apparently is headed for a licking this week on his request for continued power to devalue the dollar. An informal poll of the Senate Banking sub-committee headed by Carter Glass, of Virginia, indicates six will vote against extending this monetary power. Only four may vote for it.

Peace—It's wonderful!

IT WAS THE LAST DAY for filing Federal income tax returns and the office of Sergeant-at-arms Kenneth Romney was packed with House members availing themselves of the service of two overworked Internal Revenue notaries. The line formed on the right and it looked like a long wait.

Representative George W. Johnson, of West Virginia, entered and observed the waiting queue with dismay. Then came rare inspiration.

"Haven't you fellows voted?" he queried. "They are voting on Howard Smith's bill."

Incredulously, even suspiciously, tax-harassed members eyed him.

"I mean it," said Johnson. "Didn't you hear the bell?"

Reluctantly, Representative Henry B. Steagall, of Alabama, yielded his place at the head of the line and dutifully made for the floor. Other members followed.

Smiling benignly, almost innocently, Johnson moved up to the head of the list.

"HELLO, CUSS!" said the small, pixie-faced man, his merry eyes twinkling beneath enormous white mops of overhanging eyebrows.

"How'ya, Cuss!" replied the tall, full-chested fellow, his ruddy face radiating the rough benevolence of a retired athlete at a college homecoming.

Just Vice President John Nance Garner and Senator Robert R. Reynolds, of North Carolina, greeting one another in the Senate lobby.

THIS BUSINESS of Republican freshmen remaining faithfully on the House floor during all proceedings, ready to cast ther "NO" votes against any Administration proposal, is irritating the House leadership no end.

"They don't know they can leave the floor," jibed one veteran Democrat.

"One of them just asked Joe Martin if he could go to lunch."

But even the Republicans have their troubles holding a quorum. One of the new Ohio Republicans was strangely missing the other day when his vote was needed. A frantic search started, and finally the vagrant one was located perched high in the visitors' gallery.

Gesticulating wildly, his colleagues signaled him to come down. The truant member leaned far over the gallery railing.

"What's the matter?" he shouted. "Can't I vote up here?"

CCC, After Six Years, Has Much to Show for Its Work

Ten-minute field talks break the work-day. In "skull practise" at night, the foreman explains the blueprint of a buidling to be erected; describes the "why" of a soil-conservation contour; explains the functions of a fire-break; describes the grasses which will hold the land in place. Each crew learns about one thing—building, soil, forestry, road-construction, cooking or machinery.

Thus, says Director Fechner, the CCC breaks the "vicious circle" of young workers—"the employer will not hire them because they are inexperienced and undesirable and the youths cannot gain experience and desirable characteristics without jobs."

If a boy wants more knowledge of the "three r's," he gets it on his own time—before work in the morning or after work at night. About 90 per cent of the enrollees take school work in the camps. Last year 8,817 illiterates learned to read and write, 3,517 boys finished grammar grades, 634 finished high school and 13 got college diplomas.

Because boys with more limited opportunities predominate in the camps, the American Youth Commission has questioned whether boys with high school training are as well adapted for the camps as some others. An official of the commission, which is surveying the CCC now, said "studies seem to indicate that boys of more limited educational and social backgrounds are the ones that benefit most from camp experience."

All Benefit Physically

Physically, all the boys seem to benefit. Director Fechner found that enrollees put on nine to eleven pounds in their first two months at camp. Cooks coax boys off their meat-and-potato diets by stuffing lettuce with jelly. Dentists, who call twice a year, pull hundreds of rotted teeth from uncared-for months, and repair those still sound.

The camps give dances and ask in the girls from nearby towns. Y. W. C. A. girls teach dancing on Friday nights at Co. 236, Chenango Fork, N. Y. Up in the Blue Ridge Mountains, a company clerk steps out and teaches the crowd the "Lambeth Walk." A hillbilly who whiffed smuggled "corn" too often is "handled" by boys in special uniforms.

Once in a while a boy goes "over the hill." That's desertion. From 6 to 8 per cent of the year's discharges are desertion cases. Homesickness is the major cause.

CCC officials have asked local welfare workers who pick the boys for camp to judge their fitness more carefully. Camp officers have cracked down on hazing—no more frogs in new boys' beds. And some camps assign an older boy as "buddy" for each new man. At first, many of the boys came to camp licked—"they were against the Government, against capitalism, against religion, against their family, even against themselves."

Now many boys enter CCC to help their families. "In spite of the high percentage of experience with broken homes," the youth commission found, "there is a surprising expression of devotion to the institution of the family."

Discipline is a matter of camp spirit. If a boy gets unruly, the reserve army officer in charge has these alternatives: "a talking down;" special duty on holidays; a dock in pay (not more than $3 a month), dishonorable discharge. There is no guardhouse.

Jobs in Indust For Many P

Well, where go when camp days are Ford takes some, and so does DuPont. So do other corporations. Eighteen boys in Missouri got job because a CCC truck broke down. The garage-owner took a liking to the driver and hired him. Later he went back to the CCC for men. Sidney Breece left the Nashoba, Okla., camp to become a towerman; now he's a forest ranger. James F. Bary, from Camp Cranberry, W. Va., got a job in a Washington filling station; two years later he got another job for his camp buddy.

Four CCC boys played big-time football last fall—Lyle Rockenbach, Micigan State guard; Dom Principe, Fordham fullback; James "Jabbo" Sell, L. S. U. halfback, and George "Butch" Nash, the Minnesota end.

Some 100,000 more men will come out of the camps in April. Meanwhile, Assistant Director James J. McEntee says conservation work already laid out could keep 300,000 boys busy for the next 35 years.

Effective Parole System Believed Key to Crime Problem Solution

To a growing number of observers the best way to clean up America's backyard of crime is through establishment of more effective parole methods. A criminal, snatch from prison lines (below) in time, can become a useful citizen if given a real chance, they believe. Parole must be administered, they insist, on a basis of the person's background. Observers find that swindlers, get-rich-quick schemesters, dope peddlers (left) and other willful law violators are usually poorer parole risks by far than are those who, like second-degree murderers and manslaughters (right), fall afoul the law through some impulsive act

Legal Tradition Now Stands in Way

There's No Justification, Observers Say, For Shunting Persistent Criminals Through The Mill Repeatedly—and Blindly

This is the second of two articles on the Nation's parole problem.

By Felix Cotten.

Crime is one of society's biggest problems, but its size is due mainly to the way society has dealt with it. Probably no other problem, students believe, has been so badly mishandled or offers so much room for improvement.

The national parole conference, to be held here April 17 and 18, will attempt to cut down the size of the crime problem by working out an effective system for releasing persons from prison. It will encourage adoption of the system, in the interest of uniformity, throughout the country.

There is no such thing, experts say, as a born criminal. A great many persons who make careers of crime could be redeemed at some point in their lives.

The purpose of the much misunderstood parole system is, wherever possible, to snatch individuals from criminal ways and make them useful or at least acceptable citizens. As for the others, students feel they may as well remain in prison permanently, unless, in the course of time, they show an honest determination to "go straight."

Authorities on crime generally look upon parole as the one exit through which a criminal can leave prison with a fair prospect of becoming established in society. But this means real parole, not the kind the public has been told about so frequently.

Real parole is not to be confused with pardon. It means that the released person has a job, suitable conditions in which to live, and must remain for an adequate period under competent supervision.

Legal Processes Need Improvement

The Nation's crime problem may be regarded as its disordered backyard. Reasons for the size of the problem include the partnership between politics and crime, police graft and incompetency, public indifference, and numerous other causes.

But no small part of the blame, authorities say, falls on the blind, unthinking processes of legal tradition whereby thousands of persistent criminals are shunted by the courts into prisons and leave after short sentences only to be caught and again sent through the mill.

The only reasonable way to handle a prisoner's problem, experts say, is on the basis of a thorough knowledge of the individual and his background. The statement of Justice Bolitha J. Laws of the District Supreme Court, that a judge should have at hand a case record of a convicted person before pronouncing sentence, reflects the view of forward-looking thinkers.

Students agree that persons who are sentenced to corrective institutions are no different, in a large proportion of cases, from the mass of mankind. There is no particular type which may be pointed to as a criminal type. Criminals are the product of environment and circumstances. Not infrequently they commit crimes as a result of mere chance, and got to jail because they were the ones who got caught.

Even Dillinger Might Have Been Saved

There was no particular reason why John Dillinger, the Indiana farm boy, should have become a public enemy No. 1—a killer conducting a foolish one-man war against society. Proper handling at the right time, it is agreed, might have made Dillinger a suitable citizens—no outstanding example of civic virtue perhaps, but at least not a killer. The same is true of some other public enemies No. 1

Under the modern parole system, a prisoner is not released on parole unless it appears that he would be a good parole risk—that is, his background and conduct in prison must be such as to give promise of ability to establish himself in a free competitive system without reverting to crime.

Dr. James Allen Nolan, director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, says the worst parole risk is the forger and false pretender—in other words, the swindler, con man and trickster, no matter in what direction he applies his talent.

"Give me a good stick-up man in preference to a habitual forger," he declared. "There may be some reason why a man roams the streets, holding people up at the point of a gun—some cause that is accessible and therefore removable.

False Pretender Never Reforms

"But the forger and false pretender is an individual of a different stripe. His essential characteristic is falsehood. He is false to the people he knows and to himself. He makes a living by violating the trust and confidence of people whom he pleases to call friends."

Dr. Nolan said he could not recall a confirmed criminal of this type who had ever made good. There is something in their inner being, some mental twist or slant of attitude, that makes their whole life a lie. Truth itself becomes untruth upon their lips. The extraordinary story of Philip Musica, alias F. Donald Coster, is a recent case in point.

Others familiar with the characteristics of criminals, among them Joseph E. Dayton, director of the Bureau of Rehabilitation here, and Hugh F. Rivers, executive secretary of the local Parole Board, confirm Dr. Nolan's observation. The forger and false pretender, Dayton observes, simply seem to be unable to tell the truth.

In this case, however, as in others, it is impossible to lay down any set rule which does not have its exception. People who commit crimes, after all, are personalities, and there is no one exactly like any other. Each is a separate and original story, and must be considered purely on the basis of the person's environment and the circumstances under which the crime was committed.

It would appear that, if there is any person who by nature is a criminal, it is one whose characteristic of falsehood induces him to gain the confidence of people for the purpose of robbing them. This applies, however, not to the first-time forger or false pretender, but to the person who, by repeated crimes, has shown a definite twist in this direction. The hold-up man is much more honest. He leaves no doubt as to his purpose.

Swindlers Like The Easy Life

It is questionable, however, whether even a confirmed swindler is not a criminal because of some other characteristic than falsehood. Dr. Nolan points out that they usually are avaricious, and are unwilling to work for a living. In other words, they are lazy and love an easy life—like the vast majority of mankind. Then, due to some mental deficiency, they adopt a mode of life which promises big returns for little effort.

This, after all, is pretty much the attitude of the kidnaper. The run-of-mine burglar, housebreaker and hold-up man likewise has his eye on luxury procured by a minimum of work.

Criminals, Dr. Nolan said, often are made in childhood. Even if they don't become criminals during their growing years, the germ that leads the individual into a life of crime frequently is acquired in the formative stage of life. If all children were brought up properly, crime probably would disappear, except perhaps for rare occurrences due to jealousy and similar emotional outbursts. Broken homes, the bad example set by parents, virtual abandonment of children to do as they please—these things, Dr. Nolan said, are the chief laboratory of crime.

One of the most discouraging aspects of the whole situation is the fact that many people don't seem to mind serving time. Mr. Dayton recalls a fellow who had been released from the penitentiary. He got along all right. "Now, you see," Mr. Dayton told him, "if you just keep on running this elevator and doing as you have been doing. You can make a living and you never will have to go back to the penitentiary."

"Oh, I don't know," the fellow replied languidly. "It ain't so bad."

Institutions usually are bad influences from the standpoint of keeping youngsters out of crime. Dr. Nolan observes that, if a person who commits a crime has been in an institution before attaining the age of 18, prison holds as a rule no horror for him. If committed for the first time after reaching 18, usually he does not want to go back. In other words, prison to a youth who grew up in an institution, and knows no other kind of life, is little different from home.

Delinquency of homes is something which Government, of course, can do nothing about except in an educational way. The trouble is that Government, by the way it has handled crime, has probably done more than anything else to create the problem which now exists. Coddling of criminals, and promiscuous pardons by politicians have been a big factor. This sort of thing has pushed felons deeper into the mire of crime, whereas the judicious exercise of sence, supported by full knowledge of each criminal's case, might have rescued most of them—notwithstanding a bad juvenile background.

Crime, experts point out, is like habit. It is virtually useless to try to do anything with a hardened criminal. But the Dillinger who was shot down by G-men was not the green farm youth. His nature had become sour milk, and the magic has not been found that could have retrieved him.

Should Consider Criminal's Attitude

Justice Laws lays stress on the criminal's attitude. The attitude of various criminals who commit the same kind of crime may vary greatly. This fact, in his opinion, is of overpowering importance in determining what should be done with them.

Aside from the swindler, who usually is a criminal by choice, there is a large number of persons who are bad parole risks because of diseased mental states. In this category is the alcoholic who has fallen into ways of crime, and the narcotic addit. The confirmed gambler likewise is a bad parole risk. He just can't keep from gambling, it seems, and he will commit crimes to get money to gamble with. Perhaps this also is a diseased mental condition, induced by habit.

The alcoholic nearly always falls by the wayside. He goes on a bender, hocks everything in sight to get money to buy liquar, and in the depressed state for follows holds up a store, or does a housebreaking job, or something of the sort.

The dope addict is hopeless. He may be to all appearances cured, but, after all, he was somebody's customer, and the dope peddler hunts him up and pretty soon he is a regular client again. Dope changes a person's nervous system. Certain kinds of disease, such as sleeping sickness, alters an individual's personality. There are now a lot of men in prison who got there, in reality, for no reason except that they are World War veterans whose minds were warped by service in the front-line trenches in France.

Judges like Laws who want to know the background of convicted persons brought before them to be sentenced are particularly desirous of finding out whether the crime is the result of a mental condition. As matters stand, judges frequently sentence men to prison without ascertaining that they were World War veterans who had undergone treatment in veterans' hospitals.

In Justice Laws' opinion, this is comparable to the surgeon who would operate on a man without finding out what was wrong with him. Courts also deal with people who are illand often without knowing it, without attempting, in fact, to find out the truth.

Among the partners of crime—dope, and gambling and drink in overdose—in syphilis. Men have been known to commit crimes here in the District simply because they had syphilis or gonorrhea, or both, and imprisonment offered the only hope of treatment.

Investigation has shown that the sex offender's trouble frequently is mental. In a large percentage of cases he is in need of institutional treatment—and if he cannot be cured, of course, it certainly would be the heighth of absurdity to let him out again.

Good parole risks include persons who go to prison because they happened to commit a crime out of impulse, or some emotional disturbance. Remove the cause, and as a usual rule the offender does not revert to crime. In this class fall manslaughter and second-degree murder cases. People who kill out of ealousy, once out of prison, usually do not get into further trouble.

But there are numerous persons who can be safely paroled, provided a ob can be found for them and satisfactory home conditions arranged. Jobs—that is the big need. There are now 25 or 30 men in the Lorton Reformatory who have been granted parole and cannot be released for the simple reason that it is impossible to find jobs for them.

The Works Progress Administration has provided a great many jobs for people released from prison, and thus has aided in rehabilitating prisoners. Many employers, Henry Ford for example, have helped in the work of enabling men who leave prison walls to re-establish themselves. Some employers in the District have been helpful in this work—the theory being that the rescue of men from crime is one sure way of curtailing crime.

Many examples can be cited of the way in which criminals have responded to an effort on somebody's part to do something for them. They are human, in fact, their trouble frequently is that they are too human. A kind word or act, a small thing in the way of real help instead of a sermon, often has proved to be the key that opened up a rebellious criminal's reason and prompted him to forsake his ways.

District records afford cases of fellows who, after serving time in penitentiaries throughout the country, took hold and went straight just because somebody, for their first time in their lives, actually took an interest in them. This was such an unusual thing for them that, out of gratitude, they made good.

Occasionally, there is the fellow who gets tired of going to jail, decides to reform himself—and does.

Growing Cost of Government

A brief examination of the financial statement just released by the Secretary of the Treasury covering the funds appropriated by the recent Short Session of Congress, which adjourned on the 3rd instant, reflects the increasing demands made upon the Federal Government. The following recapitulation is interesting: For civil and diplomatic expenditures for this fiscal year some nine millions; for army, fortifications, and U. S. Military Academy some sixteen millions; for the Navy some five millions; for Revolutionary War and other pensions some two millions; for the Indian Department one million seven hundred thousand; for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities one million eight hundred thousand; for promotion of useful arts-some nine thousand dollars; and for private claims against the government forty-five thousand dollars. The grand total of appropriations for the operation of the Federal Government for the fiscal year is $36,882,242,00.

The Smithsonian Bequest

On the sixth of December last President Van Buren, by a special message, informed Congress that pursuant to an act of Congress, July 1, 1836, he had brought a suit in the London Courts to recover the sum of $500,000 from the estate of James Smithson, of London, who had bequeathed this sum to the United States for the purpose of establishing an institution for "the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men", and that having received these funds and invested them in state bonds it was now the proper time to provide for the use of the revenue derived therefrom in accordance with the will of the testator.

Upon the reading of this message John Quincy Adams moved that there be a joint select committee appointed to consider plans for the execution of the terms of the will. As a basis for this consideration certain letters written by the best minds of the United States in response to a series of questions sent out by the Secretary of State were delivered to Congress by the President with the expectation that the suggestions contained therein might be helpful in reaching a conclusion which would more nearly conform to the conditions of the bequeathment.

This committee reported that the best interpretation of the aim of the testator would be to establish in Washington an institution where the great masters of the country would have an opportunity to lecture on subjects of advanced science and classic literature. In fine, "such an institution as would give to the faculties of the human mind an improvement and power far beyond that obtainable by the ordinary systems of education, and far beyond what is afterwards obtainable in any of the professional pursuits."

The bill introduced to incorporate these aims, however, failed to pass. No doubt the President will seek some action on this matter at the next session of Congress.

Funds Collected to Influence Elections

NEW YORK CITY—The investigating committee of the U. S. House of Representatives appointed to ascertain how far funds collected from employees of the Federal Government located in this city are used to influence elections has already found "indisputable evidence" to this end. For instance, by sworn testimony the committee learned that the higher ranking employees of the U. S. Custom House paid to the Tammany Hall General Committee 10% of their salary while those of lower rank paid from two to six per cent. "If these federal employees had not paid these assessments they were told that 'they would be reported to the General Committee'".

Another witness, a federal employee, who received a salary of $1,500 when asked to contribute 10% protested on the grounds that he had many financial obligations to meet. Whereupon the committee's assessor asked: "Don't you think that your job with the Federal Government is worth a ten percent contribution to Tammany Hall?"

Santa Anna Comes to the Defense Of His Country

VERA CRUZ, MEXICO—Because of the inability of the Mexican forces under the leadership of President Bustamente to resist the attack and capture of Vera Cruz, General Santa Anna, who has been in retirement in this province, organized an army and has succeeded in preventing the French forces from invading of the interior. It is now rumored that since this act on the part of Santa Anna has revived his popularity he may be able to drive Bustamente from the Presidential office and make himself again President of Mexico.

French Fleet Celebrates Victory

HAVANA, CUBA—As a part of the celebration of the capture of Vera Cruz the officers of the French fleet under the command of Admiral Baudin gave a formal dance aboard the Admiral's flagship now stationed in this harbor. The guest of honor was Prince de Joinville, the third son of his Majesty King Louis Philippe, who is attached to the staff of Admiral Baudin as a Lieutenant. Prince de Joinville is credited with the heroic act of personally taking as his prisoner during the capture of Vera Cruz the Mexican General, Arista.

Germans Migrate to United States

DRESDEN, GERMANY—Some two hundred and fifty Lutheran Puritans, who called themselves "Stephanites" from the name of their leader, a clergyman named Stephan, have left this city for the United States. It is understood that they will settle near St. Louis, Mo. A second contingent of 500 will follow shortly.

The Lost Cause

In a report recently submitted to Congress the Commission of Fine Arts makes a final plea for a change in the character of the memorial to Thomas Jefferson. Alleging that the $3,000,000 appropriated for the structure will probably not provide an entire marble interior, the commission urges substitution of an open circular colonnade which it considers preferable for artistic reasons to the proposed Pantheon.

With the foundation for the memorial nearing completion, and with bids for the superstructure already submitted, the commission's report may seem to be a pathetic document possessing only historic value. It serves, however, to remind Washingtonians that the Fine Arts Commission is unalterably opposed to honoring the memory of Thomas Jefferson by erecting a Pantheon which "had its origin in Rome during the reign of the Emperor Hadrian." It is also important as emphasizing that the Jefferson Memorial Committee, ignoring a custom of more than 25 years, did not consult nor seek the approval of the Fine Arts Commission before announcing its decision. Nor did it invite competition by architects before approval of the Pope design.

After reading how the commission's efforts to secure modification of the original plan were circumvented, and its position repeatedly misrepresented, one can only wish it had adopted a more aggressive attitude at the beginning of the controversy. There was a fight, and the commission's active aid might have turned the tide of battle.

Bids on the Pantheon are sufficiently low to make it seem probable that the memorial can be completed within the assigned cost limits. Even if that should prove possible, however, the fundamental objections remain. When future generations of Americans wonder why Thomas Jefferson has not been "more appropriately and more adequately honored" they will find a partial answer to their question in the report of the Fine Arts Commission.

But they will continue to wonder why repeated appeals for changes in a plan that met with so much popular, as well as so much expert condemnation, were throughout studiously ignored by those in a position of authority.

Give Us The Facts

Recent discussion of the Administration's low-rent housing program on the floor of the Senate emphasizes the need for more light on the subject. In attacking the program, as The Post noted at the time, Senator Tydings lacked information on some points. Senator Wagner had a good opportunity to set forth the facts and let Congress judge for itself whether the policy being followed by the United States Housing Authority is sound. Instead, he distorted some parts of the picture to make it appear more favorable to the USHA.

Senator Tydings' chief criticism was leveled at the excessive costs of rehousing slum dwellers under this plan. In reply, Senator Wagner says that the USHA "imposes very slight costs upon the public and the taxpayer." To sustain this contention he notes that the money borrowed by the USHA is costing only 1¾ per cent in interest while it is lent to cities at 3 per cent. The Senator admits that this so-called profit from interest may be only temporary. If he had been entirely frank, he would have acknowledged that comparison of interest paid on short term Government issues with interest to be obtained from 60-year loans is utterly fallacious.

Moreover, the New York Senator's discussion of annual subsidies is grossly misleading. In every instance the amount of subsidies granted by the USHA is based upon the total costs of the project. These total costs add up to more than $5,500 per family rehoused by the program as a whole. Yet Senator Wagner drew his estimates as to the annual costs of housing a slum family from a hypothetical case. He assumed an average outlay not of $5,500, but of $5,000 in a moderate-sized city and $3,000 in a small town. That gave him moderate estimates of annual subsidies—$123 per family in cities and $82 in small towns.

Why did not the Senator give Congress and the public the facts instead of worthless assumptions? As godfather of the USHA he must know that actual subsidies amount to far more than the figures he cited. To get a clear picture of the costs to the public of this undertaking, moreover, Mr. Wagner should have included local subsidies along with those from the Federal Government. When that is done the tax burden of housing a family USHA style is closer to $300 per year than to $123.

It is reasonable to object to the practice of some USHA critics of adding into one lump sum the total amount to be spent under the housing program over the next 60 years. On the other hand, no one should suppose that the maximum subsidies of $73,000,000 per year, permitted under Senator Wagner's bill to extend the limit on USHA loans, measure the costs of clearing the country's slums. This is only a beginning. If wretched housing conditions are to be wiped out, that figure would have to be multiplied many times over.

It is at this point where the weakness of the USHA becomes apparent. The excessive cost of rescuing a family from the slums under this plan is almost certain to turn public opinion against the undertaking when only a small fraction of the slums have been abolished. Only this week the House voted to impose new limitations upon the USHA. Drastic reduction of the outlays and subsidies appears to be the only way of continuing this important social work.

"Loose Fiscal Policy"

The economic philosophy of Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, has undoubtedly been misrepresented, both on the floor of Congress and in the press. An instance of the former was Senator Byrd's definition, on Friday, of the Eccles doctrine as one which preaches "that the American people will suceed better by reckless waste and thriftlessness than by saving and industry." An instance of press misrepresentation was the statement, in these columns last Wednesday, that Mr. Eccles deems "spending for the sake of spending" to be "important."

The Post takes this occasion to correct a passing observation, unessential to the central theme of the editorial where it occurred, which was indubitably unfair to Mr. Eccles. The chairman of the Federal Reserve System has never intentionally advocated "reckless waste and thriftlessness," as Senator Byrd asserts. And he has never, in so many words, advised "spending for the sake of spending." Nevertheless it must be asserted that such misrepresentations are not unnatural, when the full implications of Mr. Eccles' policies are considered. Indeed it might be more correct to define them as exaggerations.

Mr. Eccles' theory, endeavoring to summarize it in brief compass and so far as possible in his own words, is based on the assumption that "Government spending is not a deterrent but a stimulant to private enterprise." It follows that "Government deficit spending in depression periods as a supplement and stimulant to private spending" is wholly reasonable, provided it employs "only the manpower, materials and money that otherwise would be idle," and uses them "only in a way that avoids competition with private enterprise."

Mr. Eccles has recently clearly stated that "I do not believe in Government deficit spending at any time for spending's sake." He has insisted that "Government should get the maximum of value for the money it spends." He has declared himself "as anxious as anyone to see the Federal budget balanced." But his conclusion is that "the only way the budget can be brought into balance is through increased Federal revenue from an increased national income."

Up to a point there can be no disagreement with Mr. Eccles' belief that the Government's spending power must be used to take up the slack of depression. By the same token there can also be no disagreement with President Roosevelt's warning, in his message to Congress on March 10, 1933, that "too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger." And in this message Mr. Roosevelt emphasized that "for three long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy."

The "three long years" of deficit financing have now stretched out to nine long years. In 1933 President Roosevelt pointed out "with the utmost seriousness" that a deficit of something over $4,000,000,000, accumulated in three years, "has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people" and "has added to the ranks of the unemployed." What then shall be said of the deficit for the current fiscal year? This promises by itself to be almost as large as those of 1931, 1932 and 1933 together.

Either President Roosevelt was wrong in March, 1933, or Chairman Eccles is wrong in March, 1939. And the significant failure of the national economy to respond to huge and protracted doses of deficit spending clearly indicates that it is Mr. Eccles' thinking which is at fault.

This is not so much because of a fallacious theory, as because of the impossibility of applying that theory with any precision or scientific control. However well-intentioned deficit spending, it will in practice lead to that spendthrift attitude which Senator Byrd most properly condemns. It means waste, it means extravagance, it means growing uneasiness among all the intelligent and well-informed, thereby accomplishing injuries to the economic system which Mr. Eccles does not desire but nevertheless may unconsciously encourage.

From realization of this situation spring recriminations, apt to be unjust in detail but only too well founded in their general nature. There is a shadow side to Mr. Eccles's spending theory. Like alcohol, its tonic effect is offset by the ease with which it is abused and the dissolute habits which it may encourage. It is time for Mr. Eccles to see this shadow side, it is time for him to recognize how readily his doctrines adapt themselves to the "loose fiscal policy" which President Roosevelt so rightly feared—six years ago.

A Community Loss

It is truly unfortunate that efforts of the Board of Education to achieve a reasonable settlement of the Marian Anderson controversy have come to no avail. Music lovers in Washington will be keenly disappointed that extraneous issues again impede the appearance of an accomplished artist whose visits here had come to be regarded as an annual event. But very clearly no blame for the present impasse can be placed at the door of the school authorities.

Three weeks ago the issue was whether or not the Board of Education would relax its rules to meet "an unforeseen exigency." Mr. D. A. Wilkerson, of Howard University, had appealed to the board "to meet a specific emergency situation." Representing Miss Anderson's sponsors he told the board that "We do not raise with you any question of continuing policy. Rather, we appeal for the use of a particular building for a particular occasion." The board responded favorably to that plea, with commendable public spirit.

The Concert Series Committee of Howard University now wishes to change the basis of the arrangement. It is unwilling to recognize any "conditions or implications" in accepting the use of Central High School auditorium. Consequently this committee must now assume full responsibility for preventing the appearance of Miss Anderson. Obviously Dr. Ballou could issue a permit for use of the school only in accord with the policy laid down by the board. And that body as obviously feels that it has gone as far as it can lawfully go in making concessions.

Two considerations sustain the board in this attitude. One of its rules forbids the use of school buildings for purposes of private profit. The fact that this rule has often been honored in the breach does not mean that it should continue to be deliberately ignored. Considering the size of the fee now requested by Miss Anderson it is impossible to see how the Board of Education could reasonably sanction the use of school property for her concert without previous agreement that it will not be regarded as a precedent.

Moreover, the board is obligated under the law to maintain a dual system of schools in Washington. It has shown willingness to interpret this law broadly, but it cannot connive in defying the legislation. Since 1864 the board has been under instruction from Congress to provide schools for colored children and to distribute its funds on a proportionate basis between white and colored institutions. Of course, the board cannot itself take the responsibility of breaking down this dual system. It may appear unreasonable to extend to cultural performances restrictions primarily designed to govern the instruction of children. But if so, under our powerless local government it is clearly the function of Congress rather than the Board of Education to give the lead for reform.

In brief, the issue now raised extends far beyond the appearance of Miss Anderson at Central High School on Easter Sunday. It is no longer a question of making special arrangements for an artist to sing, but one of modifying law and public policy in the use of school buildings. Behind the latter issue is the much more basic question of racial segregation in Washington schools. Obviously these points of controversy cannot be disposed of in the next three weeks. So the community has apparently been deprived of an event which, in addition to its cultural value, might have served most constructively to foster inter-racial good will.

The Aaland Islands Again

From the Christian Science Monitor.

As the League grew weaker and the respect for the post-war treaties dwindled, the situation of the Aaland Islands grew more precarious. They were like a vacuum in the naval situation, an air hole in the steel frame which kept up the balance in the Baltic. In the event of war any power could land troops and guns, set up naval bases and air fields. All the neighboring countries would have been exposed.

But instead of taking independent action on the ground of national self-interest or any other standard excuse, Finland first approached Sweden. Together these nations have agreed that the southern islands may be fortified and that the natives should be trained to help defend themselves. Had war broken out last September the two countries were prepared to act together at once. Now there has been time for more deliberate action and all the signatory powers as well as the League will be formally consulted. What the great naval powers will do depends, of course, on their self-interest, but the chances are their consent was obtained in advance. The real problem is Russia and Germany.

Queen's Gambit

EVER SINCE EVE took up gardening, wives have been adopting their husbands' hobbies, remolding personal likes and dislikes to suit their lords and masters. One of my friends gave up all hope of clearing her pretty living room of tubes, condensers and allied gadgets, so she learned the code and became an enthusiastic radio amateur. Another, whose husband likes to cook, always steps into the background when they entertain, and beams with pride as the guests compliment the chef upon his truly fine spaghetti.

In my own case, it was chess. Before my marriage I had always pictured the game as a refined pastime for elderly gentlemen. Some current mystery story was named after one of the pieces—The Black Bishop, I believe. A gambit reminded my vaguely of something lambs were supposed to do over the spring meadows, and a scholar's mate suggested a faded little woman trying to make both ends meet.

My game progressed slowly, with much explaining and great patience on the part of the teacher, who kept me supplied with various books filled with diagrams that looked like fillet patterns. After a year I was promoted and given one rook as a handicap. Occasionally I could, by ignoring every rule of strategy, plow through to a checkmate, sacrificing my pawns and pieces in a magnificent offensive.

"A fine general you would make!" I was told. "Useless slaughter!" And so, after ten years, my particular Adam is at last reconciled to the fact that I am not chess minded. Today I sit on the sidelines and kibitz, enjoying myself thoroughly so long as the moves are not my own dreadful responsibility. And I have developed a deep respect for the game.

Thomas Huxley likens chess to life, saying:

"Suppose it were perfectly certain that the life and fortune of every one of us would depend one day or other, upon his winning or losing a game of chess. Don't you think that we should all consider it a primary duty to learn at least the names and moves of the pieces; to have a notion of a gambit and a keen eye for all the means of giving or getting out of check? Do you not think that we should look with disapprobation amounting to scorn, upon the father who allowed his son, or the State which allowed its members to grow up without knowing a pawn from a knight?"

The great biologist goes on to say that the world is a chess board, with each of up playing against the invisible opponent, who is invariably just but who demands in return absolute honor and a knowledge of the rules of the game—the laws of nature. To the master of those laws is given success, but one who is ignorant of them may expect only failure and inevitable defeat.

The history of chess is almost as old as civilization. Some authorities say that it started in China, some in Egypt, and others insist that its origin was in India. One story says that a Chinese mandarin invented it to keep his soldiers busy "at a game of war" during their months in winter quarters. It is generally conceded that the name "chess" is derived from Shah—king. And "checkmate" comes from Shah Mat—the king is dead. The legends surrounding the game are almost as numerous and varied as its moves.

But if the early princes took their chess seriously, the more modern masters are no less earnest. Paul Morphy, the great American champion of a hundred years ago, kept his boards in a bank vault—or to be more exact, in an ex-bank vault. His house on Royale street in New Orleans was formerly the Bank of France, and Morphy stored the various games in progress on the shelves of the old vault. Considering that many were played by mail, the old joke about men growing old before the king was checkmated becomes fairly credible, especially when one remembers that the postal service during the early days of the nineteenth century was not the efficient machine it is today.

The mathematical mind is usually considered to be a chess mind. But a friend of my husband's tells of one of his professors who was an undoubted genius at figures but a hopeless (although enthusiastic) dud at chess. One wonders just what manner of player Charles Dodgson might have been! His alter-ego, Lewis Carroll, played a wild game when he carried Alice through the Looking Glass. But the moves were all there—the jerky motions of the white knight, the king who stayed more or less in the same place, and the queens dashing all over the board.

"Look! Look!" she (Alice) cried, pointing eagerly. "There's the white queen running across the country! She came out of the woods over yonder. How fast she can run!"

"There's some enemy after her, no doubt," the king said, without even looking round. "That wood's full of them."

"But aren't you going to run and help her?" Alice asked, very much surprised at his taking it so quietly.

"No use, no use!" said the king. "She runs so fearfully quick."

In the end Alice reached the eighth square in her progress across the board, and so became queen. Delightful exchange! She has my sympathy, for being a chess player is arduous enough without being transformed into one of the pieces.

Games come and go. Bridge is an old standby, of course. A thousand miles of the Great Wall must have been built during the Mah Jong era. Monopoly had its day, and Chinese checkers seems to be on the wane (probably because the marble season is beginning and the small fry have made off with the aggies). But chess goes on forever.

HAZEL SCAIFE DETWILER.

Industrious Gambler

It is to be hoped that the obituaries of Frederick Parker will not lead to an increase of betting in England. It must be difficult, however, for young and innocent people not to feel optimistic about their chances of making a fortune on the turf when they read of Parker's having won £500,000 by betting in 20 years.

Fred Parker did not bet for fun. He knew nothing of the lofty rapture of backing a 33-to-1 winner merely because of its name or because it was number 13 on the racecard. "He was no gambler," his ex-secretary declares. "His money went on as near a cert as a horse can be, . . . He always bet on the finest information. He used his head, kept cool and never blinked when he lost. He made betting a business."

There could scarcely be a more disillusioning account of a betting man's life. Here is no gaiety such as we ordinary people associate with Ascot and Derby day. Life for the betting man is a solemn business, and every penny won by him is earned in the sweat of his brow.

"Betting," said the ex-secretary, "kept us busy 14 hours a day sometimes. He'd have only four hours in bed, and spend the other six in festivity and good fellowship." After 14 hours' work and only four hours' sleep, few of us would have much energy left for festivity and good fellowship.

It is obvious that Mr. Parker's career must be looked on, not as that of a frivolous pleasure-lover, but as that of an exceptionally hard-working financier. I am convinced, indeed, that most city men with incomes of about £15,000 a year do far less work for their money than did Mr. Parker.

In pointing out that the betting man is a serious worker, I do not hold him up as an example to be followed. My purpose is rather to use him as a warning to all those with a desire for a lazy life who believe that money made by betting is easily earned.

If you want an easy life, I would say to the young, either do not bet at all or bet only for fun. Today the majority of the men and women of England seem to have taken to betting on the football pools, and many of them seem to find it very hard work indeed. There is no Englishman who does not hate filling up an income-tax form, yet every week Englishmen, their wives, their sons and their daughters are filling up football forms that involve 20 times as much concentrated labor as any income-tax form that was ever devised.

I can assure them from experience that there is no harder work than foretelling the future. It is easier, I am convinced, to write a novel than to give a correct forecast of the first three horses in the Grand National. At least, more people seem to write novels than to be able to name the first three horses in the Grand National before the race.

It seems to me that the anti-gambling enthusiasts should approach the subject of betting and gambling from this point of view and terrify the young by depicting the deadly ant-like slavery of the betting man and gambler's life. They call betting a sin, which it surely is not. The way to scare the young is to call it hard labor.

Paying For His Whistle

OLD JED BOWERS was ploughing Casual Smith's garden, whistling as he worked, and the Old Timers watched and listened. He went up and down its length, turning the earth toward its center and every time he made a turn he interrupted his whistle to call, "Now, Glory! now, Be!" He made tune and job fit; bar and furrow would end together.

Jed won his horses at a church raffle. They had seen their best days but to their new owner and his wife they were heaven sent. "Glory be!" the old woman had said when she heard the news, so Glory and Be became their names.

"I'll wager 15 cents," said Capt. Ebenezer Longbow, "that we are all thinking the same old thing: that it is a pleasure to watch somebody else work; or some other of the Joe Miller variations."

"I was busy with one of them," Casual Smith confessed. "I was thinking how odd it was that we four stood watching Jed, but it had never occurred to one of us to offer any suggestion on how the job should be done."

Capt. Longbow nodded understandingly. "A woman couldn't do it," he said. "She'd tell him to work nearer to the fence or further away from it and to keep away from the castor bean bush which drives the moles away."

"And I know one who objects to his whistling," said Casual Smith.

"Dunno as I blame her there," put in Demosthenes McGinnis. "Some whistlers are pests."

"It all depends on the whistle, the whistler and the company he is in," said Capt. Longbow. "Now a little soft under-the-breath whistle—"

"Oh, that!" Mr. McGinnis dismissed it with a wave of his hand. "That doesn't count. A man does that naturally when he's currying a horse."

"Soothes both man and beast," soothed Casual Smith.

"It's like the grunt that goes with the fall of the ax in splitting wood," explained D. McGinnis. "What I mean is it serves a useful purpose."

"And I've seen a good mechanic treat a piece of machinery as though it were a horse," said Casual Smith; "whistling softly as he considered his problem, and it probably helps a lot, giving his mind a kind of necessary rhythm."

"I seem to call to mind," remarked Parson Bob, "that some famous person praised highly the man who whistled at his work, because it meant content and a clear conscience."

"Glad you've forgotten who it was," said Capt. Longbow, "so we won't have to hold it against him. It was likely just a lapse which may happen to any man. Content may mean stagnation, and the clear conscience merely an empty head."

"It's the expert whistler I want to throttle," rasped D. McGinnis, "the fellow who tells the world he's good. He thinks of his whistle and not of his work."

"I've heard him," said Capt. Longbow. "Goes to lunch to the tune of 'The Girl I Left Behind Me' and comes back to the tune of the Dead March in 'Saul.' And won't pick up a hoe until he has mastered the trill he had been experimenting with."

"I don't know how true it is," ventured Casual Smith, "but they tell me that in newspaper offices the man who whistles at his work is promptly taken out and shot."

"More than likely," said Capt. Longbow. "And quite proper."

Parson Bob looked at them indulgently. "Of course I know you're joking," he said. "But I confess that when I am writing a sermon it distracts me if there is anybody whistling in the neighborhood."

"And try to write verse under such conditions!" exploded Capt. Longbow.

"Well, that's one virtue in whistling that I never thought of," said D. McGinnis. "If you didn't write verse we wouldn't have to listen to it."

"And you wouldn't have the joy of adding the sour note," supplemented Capt. Longbow. "But no! We'll still present a united front against the chronic whistler. As Sandy McNab used to say, 'Though a man should ha'e as fine a whustle as iver cocked a lip he should aye leave the whustlin' tae the birrds.'"

"Sandy McNab," repeated Parson Bob. "Was he a poet?"

"Bartender," replied Capt. Longbow.

Parson Bob was still looking at Capt. Longbow reproachfully when Mrs. Smith came through the garden gate and joined them. "It ought to be a good job with so many supervisors," she said. And then, in the same breath: "Why, Casual! He has ploughed straight through my parsley bed. And all four of you looking at him when he did it!"

They looked crestfallen, and she appraised them as though they were four little boys. "Oh, well," she said at last. "I suppose it was inevitable, with a quartet of day-dreamers and a man who whistles instead of thinking of what he is doing."

Casual Smith nooded wisely at his cronies. "It is the employer after all who pays dear for his whistle," he said.

The South's Problems

By Louis M. Jiggitts
Vice Chairman, Democratic National Committee

III—Farm Tenancy; Lynching

This is the third in a series of six articles on problems confronting the South. The remaining articles will appear on successive Sundays on this page.

THE SOUTH RECOGNIZES the fact that it faces a farm tenant problem. But we insist that the problem cannot be solved by agitators and uplifters, and we believe that progress will be made only by approaching the problem from a Southern viewpoint.

We believe that it is impossible to convert all of the tenants as they exist today into independent farmers overnight. Many of them are incapable of managing a farm, and to give them farms on any terms would be utterly futile.

We do believe that it is possible to educate a majority of them, particularly the younger generation, so that they may become capable of assuming the responsibility necessary for an inedependent farmer at some future time. However, we are hugging no disillusions down here. From a practical standpoint we know that cotton cannot pay on small farms with small acreage, especially under the present control system. Therefore, if a larger number of small farms should be created throughout the South it would be necessary to readjust Southern agriculture.

This cannot be done in a day or a year or a generation. What we particularly resent is constant agitation of theorists who would change the agricultural life of the South abruptly and thus cause maladjustment which could only lead to disaster. Our farm leaders in the South have long recognized that farm tenancy is a problem. If the Federal Government wants to accomplish anything it will do well to consult Southern farm leaders on Southern problems.

SHARECROPPER AND WIFE

WE DON'T NEED and we won't tolerate agitators from other sections. In the first place, we have our own crackpots and rainbow chasers to contend with, to say nothing of our uplifters, futile little fellows full of futile ideas. In the second place, we have confidence in the ability of our own farm leaders. They know the conditions which have prevailed and which must be overcome if progress is to be made. And they can approach the problem from a practical standpoint, an' accomplishment which seems entirely lacking in the general run of agitators and uplifters.

We do not agree with Mencken that the share croppers and tenant farmers in the South are idiots. We know that they have potentialities; but on the other hand we resent such statements as that taken from the report of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union to the Governors' Commission on Farm Tenancy in Arkansas, part of which reads:

"You can make known to your fellow-countrymen the exact nature of the tyranny, the terror, the injustice, the brutality, the hunger for food, clothes, jobs, homes, lands and freedom that exists among the unfortunate victims of the system that has broken down and in doing so has condemned literally thousands of men, women and children to a condition often more humiliating, debasing and cruel than chattel slavery itself."

We don't agree with that picture. And while we recognize that there is hardship in many instances and certainly some injustice, we know that the present distressful condition of share croppers and tenant farmers is due equally as much to the depression in farm prices as the hardship suffered by factory workers in the North is due to the depression in industry.

We earnestly hope that a solution of the farm tenant problem can be found, but we know that this solution when it is found will be the result of efforts on the part of Southern farm leaders.

A STATEMENT worth remembering is contained in a letter written to Dr. L. C. Gray by Henry C. Taylor, from Chicago, dated February 12, 1937, and contained in House Document No. 149, Seventy-fifth Congress, First Session, being a message from the President of the United States transmitting the Report of the Special Committee on Farm Tenancy. The letter reads:

"Dr. L. C. Gray

Resettlement Administration:

Please insert following statement as my comment upon the report as a member of the President's Special Tenancy Committee: 'None of the proposals in this report should be carried forward other than on a strictly experimental basis until their merits have been thoroughly tested. The proposals contain the possibility of doing more harm than good to the farming population of the United States, particularly in reducing thrift by making the entry into land ownership too easy and by increasing competition in agriculture by encouraging people to be farmers who should enter other occupations. Too much encouragement to enter upon farming will make it all the more difficult to secure parity incomes for farmers. There should be a clear line drawn between a farm tenancy policy and a poor relief policy and they should be separately administered.'

Henry C. Taylor.

It is well to remember that the Farm Tenancy Problem is not exclusively Southern. It exists to some extent in all States of the Union. And as a matter of cold statistics the only improvement in the Nation during the depression has been in the South. While the percentage of tenancy increased in the other 32 States, the only decline in the proportion of tenancy since 1930 has occurred in the 16 States of the South. True, the proportional decline has been very small, but the fact remains that this has happened in the South regardless of how the uplifters may attempt to explain it.

I COULD NOT PROFESS to cover Southern problems even as sketchily as I am forced to do in this series without mentioning lynching. The great majority of Southerners are opposed to lynching. This is a fact which, if believed, as it should be, ought to weigh heavily with those who would foist a Federal anti-lynching bill upon the South.

It ought to be generally recognized, even by the most venomous South baiter, that lynching is on the decline. If any other crime were being so steadily eliminated there would be general cause for rejoicing. We are thoroughly shocked by gang murders, but we have not insisted upon violating States' Rights, by the enactment of a Federal anti-gang law. A great majority of us also decry lynching and we see no necessity of violating States' Rights by the enacting of an anti-lynching law. We are steadily wiping out lynching, but despite our progress, we are being faced with the possibility of humiliation because a few politicians are anxious to curry favor with a certain portion of the voters in their respective States.

We view an anti-lynching bill as an insult to the South, as an expression on the part of the Federal Government that the South is unfit to rule itself. We consider an anti-lynching law intolerable, which accounts for the fact that Southern Representatives and Senators always oppose it to the utmost. We see no necessity for further violation of States' Rights. Furthermore, we believe that we are solving the problem and that if the Federal Government will devote itself to more important matters confronting the Nation as a whole, this problem will shortly become no problem at all.

That this is so is readily seen from the statistics on lynching. From 1922 to 1925 the total number of lynchings in the South was 120. From 1930 to 1933 the total was 61. From 1922 to 1933, there was approximately 50 per cent reduction in the number of lynchings. In 1934 there were 14; in 1938 there were 6. Therefore, in the last five years there has been a reduction of more than 50 per cent. If the South is left alone, and the present progress is continued, which seems entirely probable, there will be no lynchings within the next decade.

"Upon This Rock"

Question Of Papal Primacy Debated Further

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The most ardent Catholic can not complain that your paper has not given full space and sympathetic treatment to the election and coronation of the new Pope.

But when biblical interpretation and criticism makes the expression of Christ to Peter, the basis of the church's foundation on any apostle, then the Bible becomes a volume on dialects to be used by hair-splitting theologians as in the days of the schoolmen.

Nothing can contradict the expression: "Other foundation can no man lay than that wheih is laid, which is Christ, the Lord." Any interpretation as to the "Church's one foundation," which contravenes or contradicts this, must be subordinated to the one, plain, common-sense theme song which runs through the entire New Testament.

When Christ asked Peter to answer the question: "Whom do ye say that I am (using the plural, as the voice of all the apostles), Peter as spokesman, said. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Christ replied: "Flesh and blood have not revealed this to thee, but my Father." Then followed the words, after saying that "thou are Peter;" "On this rock, I will build my Church and the gates of the grave shall not prevail against it." The "rock" was not Peter or any other apostle, but a play on the word "rock" which was Peter's named. Meaning this: "On this rock of the confession you have just made, my Church will be built."

Time has proved that this is the only possible meaning that common sense and consistency can give this expression. And where men and women from any nation or tongue have founded their faith on a "Spirit-inspired confession that Christ is the Son of God," there can be found the true Christian. J. O. KNOTT.

Washington, March 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Adherents of the Roman Catholic Church are wont to claim that their organization was built upon a "rock" and that the "rock" was the Apostle Peter. The claim has been disputed as a wrong interpretation of Scripture, for which there appears to be good grounds, as is also true concerning other claims of the church. A church built upon so frail a human character as Peter, who denied knowing Christ when he should have stood by him, would seem to be a poor foundation upon which to erect a structure claiming to be of divine origin.

Despite claims pro and con, it is widely believed that what is known as the Roman Catholic Church was established not upon an individual, but upon the ruins of the old Roman Empire of the West, when the latter fell in the year 476 A. D. JOHN D. READE.

Excerpts From Our Letters

Prognosis

In all ages since its invention, money has released men so rapidly from the narrow range of satisfactions, that few have been born to know either its functions in an economy or its harmful, even fateful possibilities. In the short history of this Nation it has caused shifts and changes the full effects of which have been obscured by the operation of temporary political gains under skilled leadership. The entry of women, at first obstructed, but later accepted because of their place and power in the money economy, gave evidence noted by a few, of the accompanying social changes which have caught us unawares. By shifting desires again it has thrown investment values into the discard enabling great, concentrated money-power to find new fields based upon technology with less labor. Equality of women, easy divorce, political power and place in legislature and administration, dissemination of the family, reduction in birthrate and a pleasure economy with eviction of tenants, change in consumption of farm products, and degradation of the currency (e. g., sales tax tokens) always accompany each other and precede dominance by a more ruthless people or a system such as Fascism or the like.—Charles M. Thomas, Washington.

Hotels

It may be that hotels work their employes long hours, though not as long as the manager works. But everyone knows (except Hugh Johnson) that practically every hotel in the United States is in bankruptcy, or has repudiated its bonds through a sale, and that they cannot stand higher wages unless hotels are to be for millionaires only. Further, anyone who knows the inside of this situation knows that hotel employes have maintained very good relations for years with hotel management until they were exploited by union leaders and agitators, who saw a nice living for themselves in stirring up this agitation.—Non-Racketeer, Washington.

Population

Prof. Fairchild, the eminent sociologist, calculated many years ago that if immigration had been entirely checked early in the nineteenth century, it is likely that our population would be just as large today, because the native American families would have remained large and not have contracted to a man, a wife, a child and a wire-haired terrier. This evolution by which the native stock has been replaced by foreign stock is well illustrated in New England. Mr. Edwin Trent states how much more sparse our population is than that of the European countries. We have, he says, 41.0 persons per square mile, whereas 490 is the figure for Great Britain. Would Mr. Trent be any happier if our population was that dense? Is there any more advantage in overcrowding the land than there is in using up in a few generations all of our other natural resources? As for the advantages of having extra population to use our surplus production of agricultural and industrial goods, that would be only a temporary benefit, for history of industry shows that industry and agriculture always can speed up to take care of growing population, and even with a population as dense as that of Great Britain or Germany, there would be overproduction to plague us.—Citizen, Washington.

Milk

Middle West Congressmen demand explanation why only Virginian and Maryland farmers can sell milk and cream to D. of C. Milk and cream test by Department of Agriculture shows that so-called "bootleg" cream is just as pure as any cream sold in the District. Some papers publish this news inside, those responsible for the story maintain silence. Mr. John Q. Public is now able to see merit of some of the things that Secretary Ickes recently claimed regarding distorted news.—Harry Holmes, Washington.

Dictator

You have not approved the Presidential purge on the sound ground that any such rubber stamp proposition went to the very essence of popular government. I submit Dictator Perkins is as objectionable as Dictator Roosevelt, if not more so, even though in a vastly more limited and subordinate form. Legislating is for Congress. Execution for law administrators. If the administrators do not want to enforce what they think is "executive absolutism," they should either resign, or be impeached.—American, Washington.

Palatable

It is my belief that economic and military conditions have been so sweepingly altered since 1917 that if and when the United States enters another war it will be under entirely different and more palatable circumstances. We shall not be called on for our army; we shall not have to dislocate our factories in order to equip four millionsoldiers. We shall be obliged only to supply capital, of which we have plenty, and to put into action a navy already constructed. The reason this is so is that our probable allies do not need manpower. The French Maginot line, the radical revision of trench warfare, France's superiority over Germany in the matter of trained reserves, modern preference for fire power instead of manpower, the development of more simply operated and more effective weapons (such as our own new automatic rifle), the high offensive power of the tank, the role of the airplane as a complement of infantry movements . . . all these factors lead to the conclusion that we shall not be called upon for an army but only for economic and naval assistance, both of which we can supply without seriously jeopardizing our democratic institutions.—Robert Harrison, Washington.

Independence

Why cannot we have an Independent Congress, such as the House of Commons and the House of Lords? The majority of voters are Republicans of the better class and would be true to their convictions, if there were no corruption or inducement to change them for a reward. Men of merit would then be chosen as representatives and could be depended upon to legislate for the good of the country and its people.—Frisbey Gilbert, Washington.

Graduates

Quite noticeably during the past several years, there has been a gradual trend toward college graduate preference with regard to Federal appointments. Such a tendency rightly seems to be discrimination against the majority to the benefit of a few. Moreover, there are not many who can logically prove that this change does nothing more or less than insidiously demoralize general morale of Government employes. Therefore, it is imperative that steps be taken to correct this situation.—Worried, Washington.

The Wallace Plan

A Reader Undertakes To 'Set Mr. Sullivan Right'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Mark Sullivan asks that someone set him right. While I am not "one of Mr. Wallace's alert young publicity men" to whom he addresses his request for correction, perhaps you and he will let me do it, since I am not restricted by any of the Government regulations that might hamper anyone of Mr. Wallace's assistants.

If the plan were based on establishing Government depots or Government subsidized food stations, it would, of course, have been denounced as socialism and communism. But it uses the established trade channels; hence some one else must be found to be "hurt." And who? The fellow with a regular job!

How fantastic the objection is becomes apparent from the very nature of the complaint: that the fellow who receives these stamps will have an advantage over the fellow who doesn't. How about the fellow now receiving free food as against the fellow who doesn't get any? The new plan is intended to accomplish two things: remove surpluses by the simple process of having people eat them up; and, secondly, assisting the low-income families in better balancing their diet so as to create a better nourished citizenry of tomorrow. It is both economic and social; and many of the most hard-headed and practical businessmen, who make their daily living out of merchandising, have pronounced the plan sound and workable, and have indorsed the humanitarian aspects.

Mr. Sullivan's great concern over the chap with a regular job who will not receive the blue stamps as against the fellow on WPA who may receive them is based on the premise that assistance is denied the low-income chap working for private industry. There are many hundreds of thousands employed in both WPA and private industry that are not now certified by the local relief agency as eligible to receive surplus commodities; there are thousands who are not on WPA who are certified as eligible for surplus commodities. Naturally, local relief set-ups differ, just as newspapermen differ and as all other kinds of human-managed endeavors differ.

No one claims anything is perfect, even newspaper reporting; there will always be marginal cases of abuse in everything, especially in any charitable or relief work. Mr. Private Worker of Mr. Sullivan's column today gets his pay, if he is fortunate enough to have a job, and is not injured, either in his self-esteem or in his ambition, because the family upstairs, who is either on local relief, or works for WPA, is also receiving pay and some free food from the Surplus Commodities Corporation. Mr. Private Worker's ambition has not been stunted or crushed up to now; why should suddenly a different plan of distributing the same surplus food to the same eligible and undernourished families kill his ambition?

Mr. Relief Recipient or Mr. WPA Worker is now, in certified cases, getting this food without blue stamps; the issuing of blue stamps will regulate the distribution of these surplus foods so that they can be consumed and eaten up by the people who need them, eliminating at least one source of waste and total loss now. But because Mr. WPA Worker will be able to get these foods as he and his family need them instead of receiving, as at present, shipments in quantities far in excess of what they can use at one time, Mr. Private Worker's ambition will suddenly be crushed! Frankly, I don't get it.

Mr. Sullivan's second "point" is as untenable as the first.

Mr. Sullivan points to the oft-quoted tale of the Government-built houses that cost too much and where low-income families are subsidized through low rentals; and where they may stay until their income reaches a level which arbitrarily has been set at $2,000. Then Mr. Sullivan points to a man whose income might rise to $2,100 through promotion, but who begs his boss not to raise his salary for he will be forced to move out of the Government-built houses.

Where would Mr. Sullivan draw the line? Was not the purpose of these housing experiments to provide better living conditions for the low-income families? And since, as Mr. Sullivan knows, records show that 75.7 per cent of all nonrelief families in America have incomes of less then $2,000, there would seem to be, at least, a fertile field for social experimentation.

How about a little fair play and giving this plan a fair trial before we condemn it as unsound?

SONG

By Edward Conn

If that unfathomed cup, the sky,
Were filled with Hybla wine
And I could drink the chalice dry
Such oenomel were brine;
No vessel's lips, I'd testify,
Intoxicate as thine.

Sun, moon and stars the brighter glow
For radiance shed by thee;
Earth's rarest flowers the sweetlier blow
While thou their goddess be;
And tides of song diviner flow
For thy dear majesty.

The treasuries of gems and gold,
Of frankincense and myrrh
That continents and oceans hold
To me of no worth were
If thou, to ardent prayer a-cold,
Repulsed thy worshiper.

Arabia, Ind, Hesperides,
If one enchanted isle,
Would be a waste mid sunless seas
Unlighted by thy smile;
And Time, denied thy witcheries
Must seem a floodless Nile.

The matin and the vesper star
Do emulate thine eyes;
Thy blushes are reflected far
In sun-down's crimson skies;
And evening's soughing zephers are
The echoes of thy sighs.

Each hour with thee is blooming prime;
Thy beams do glories rouse
From winter's death to life sublime,
Where cherubim do browse
In Paradise, thy native clime,
My only love, my spouse.

Inconsistency

The following remark was made by Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932, then a candidate for President: "If the Nation is living within its income its credit is good . . . But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds, is willing to make no sacrifice at all in its spending, if it extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, it is on the road to bankruptcy." As President Mr. Roosevelt is a direct violator of a warning against bankruptcy which he gave to the people when he spoke in Newark, N. J., October 19, 1932. —Robert N. Carson, Davenport, Iowa.

Making Americans

By Ernest Lindley

Immigrant And Labor Department

A FEW MORNINGS AGO about 400 men and women, some of them with their children, piled off an excursion train in Washington after an all-night ride from Boston. They visited the Capitol and various Government buildings, inspected the ground floor of the White House, and toured the city in buses—just like thousands of other tourists. In their eagerness and alertness they suggested the groups of high school seniors who are brought to the National Capital every spring from various cities and towns in the East as a reward for four years of good scholarship.

These visitors the other morning paid their own expenses, however, and one special function was held for them: an hour-long ceremony in the auditorium of the Department of Labor, in which the Marine Band took part.

This ceremony was held because the visitors were immigrants who had qualified for American citizenship and were about to receive their naturalization papers.

ON FEBRUARY 22, two nights after the riotous rally of the Nazi Bund in Madison Square Garden, New York City, the Public Auditorium in Portland, Oreg., was packed for the eighteenth annual public reception to new citizens: 1,247 persons naturalized in 1938. Among them were more than 100 persons of German birth. The Portland meeting was devoted to the celebration of democracy and Americanism. There were music and speeches, including one by the Governor of Oregon, and the pledge to the flag.

A few nights earlier a similar meeting was held in the auditorium of the Indiana World War Memorial in Indianapolis. A week earlier there was one in another city, and next week, probably, there will be one in still another city.

The making of new citizens is going on all the time. The public ceremonies at which new citizens receive their certificates of citizenship, now held in many communities, mark the close of long periods of preparation for most immigrants, especially those from non-English-speaking lands.

FEW PEOPLE come to this country for the purpose of undermining our institutions. They come here to earn a living and obtain freedom. To most of them this is still the land of liberty and opportunity and is heavenly in comparison with what they left or what they would find now if they returned to their native lands. A great many of them, I imagine, value the American way of life more highly than do American-born citizens who have never experienced anything else.

The work of "Americanizing" aliens—of educating them to become good citizens—is carried on by voluntary groups and the public school systems all over the country, and it has been assisted by the Works Progress Administration.

But this training in citizenship is stimulated and supervised by the Department of Labor. It is ironic that Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, should be subjected to an impeachment charge based on her alleged laxity in enforcing the deportation law against a labor leader of foreign birth. I believe that the House Judiciary Committee, which is by no means friendly to Miss Perkins, will exonerate her of this charge because the facts will admit no other verdict. It should applaud her for eliminating the abuses in the enforcement of the deportation law which evoked severe condemnation from President Hoover's Commission on Law Enforcement, the Wickersham Commission.

Miss Perkins ought to be commended also for shaking up and overhauling the personnel of the Immigration Service, for sprucing up its border patrols and for her apparent success in putting a stop to the smuggling of aliens into the United States.

But even more important are the improvements she has made in the constructive work of educating immigrants for citizenship. Three years ago the Department of Labor prescribed a definite and uniform procedure for examining applicants for citizenship—the first to be adopted since the present basic naturalization law was enacted nearly 30 years earlier. Until then each naturalization examiner had followed more or less his own ideas.

THE NEW REGULATIONS of the Department of Labor put stress on good moral character and the would-be citizen's attitude toward his home, family, neighbors, community and the agencies of Government.

Every would-be citizen is required to prove that he is attached to the principles of the Constitution. When the check-up of naturalization examinaitons was made under Miss Perkins, it was found that under that provision one examiner asked: "How many gallons of water does the Amazon River discharge per hour?" What that had to do with the principles of the Constitution was never discovered. Other examiners asked other equally irrelevant questions, such as: How high is the Bunker Hill monument? How many legs has the Constitution? How many stars are there on a quarter?

For preparing immigrants for citizenship the Department of Labor has a three-fold program. First of all it issues a textbook on citizenship which by law is lent free of charge to each applicant for naturalization who attends a regular day or evening school, or a WPA school. The textbook was completely rewritten last year to explain simply, with the aid of charts, what American ideals and processes of Government are.

Secondly, the Immigration Service furnishes to the public schools the name and address of every applicant for naturalization as soon as he files his first papers. This gives the schools a chance to encourage the immigrant to take courses in Government and related subjects, as well as in the English language, which which he must show familiarity before he can obtain his final citizenship papers.

Thirdly, the department cooperates closely with local organizations in holding public ceremonies to mark the conferring of citizenship.

The Labor Department, under Miss Perkins, has helped to instill a knowledge and appreciation of the basic principles of the American system in the minds of hundreds of thousands of new citizens. It has done much to improve the quality of citizenship and to add dignity and importance to the act of becoming a citizen of the United States. This is not sensational, but it is vastly more important than whether Miss Perkins has been a shade too lenient or a shade too severe in interpreting the laws concerning the deportation of aliens in one or a dozen cases.

REFUGEES FROM CZECHO-SLOVAKIA

THE GREAT TIDE of immigration to this country ebbed at the outbreak of the World War. When it began to flow in again after the war we put up the bars with a new immigration law limiting the number of immigrants from countries outside the Western Hemisphere to about 153,000 annually.

With the onset of the great depression the inflow of immigrants dwindled to a mere trickle, which was more than offset by an outflow of emigrants returning to their native lands. In six years we lost about 240,000 in population by an excess of emigration over immigration. Last year the number of immigrants jumped up sharply to a total of 67,895—due chiefly to the maximum inflow allowed by law from Germany and Austria. Compare this with 241,700 immigrants in 1930 and an average of almost 1,000,000 per year for the ten years preceding the World War. Offsetting these 67,895 immigrants were 25,210 emigrants. And of those admitted to this country, about half were women and children and aliens of advanced age.

Since the depression began the inflow of immigrans has been held down by a strict interpretation of the requirement that an applicant for an immigration visa must satisfy the American consul to whom he applies that he will not become a public charge. This has usually meant that he must have assurance of a job before he leaves his native land or must have relatives and friends in this country to support him. As a result, most of the immigrants during the last eight years have been of superior quality.

While immigration has been narrowed down to a tiny stream and many thousands of aliens have left this country voluntarily or because they were deported by the Department of Labor, many thousands of earlier immigrants have become naturalized citizens. And still other thousands of earlier immigrants have died. Today, in consequence of all these factors, there are probably only about half as many aliens in the United States as there were in 1930. Their total is now estimated at less than 3,000,000, and probably is not more than 2,800,000.

The melting pot is rapidly finishing its task. In another 10 or 15 years, unless we reverse our immigration policy, we won't have any aliens left except the few tens of thousands who have arrived too recently to have acquired their naturalization papers.

Among The Slicks

By Evelyn Page

THE POINT I am trying to make about slicks stories (more politely called periodical fiction) is well illustrated in J. P. Marquand's "Wickford Point," which has appeared in two forms—abbreviated in The Saturday Evening Post and in full as a book. As the publicity material which accompanies "Wickford Point" states, less than half of the novel was printed in the serialized version. It is interesting to see what the editors of the Post omitted. To make that plain, I must give a brief outline of the uncut plot.

Jim Calder, the narrator, owes his place in the story (and, his cousin Harry tells him, his place in society) to the fact that he is related to the Brills of Wickford Point. Old John Brill, the distinguished ancestor, poet, and friend of Emerson and Thoreau, has left behind him an assortment of descendants. There is Cousin Clothilde, loving and humorous, whose pocketbook, when it is not empty, is at the disposal of her children, Bella, Mary, Harry and Sid.

Cousin Clothilde is always overdrawn at the bank, always out of cigarettes, and always changing the subject, not intentionally but by a kind of post hoc process. Bella is a cheerful cadger of lovers, cash, suitcases, clothing, and time. At an early age she has discovered the more primitive aids to sex appeal, such as eyes, legs, outline, and a soul perennially misunderstood. She cries aloud to her male acquaintance that she must get away from Wickford Point, and sheers away from anyone who tries to remove her from it. Bella is a so-and-so, but she is a Brill. Even Mary, who loses every suitor to her sister and thereupon weeps with hatred, considers that since Bella is a Brill she is too good for Joe Stowe. Joe may be brilliant, but even when he is a successful writer and famous to everyone else, he is still nothing but a small town boy wrom Woburn to the Brills of Wickford Point.

Harry and Sid are willing to sponge on him while they urge Bella on to a divorce. Jim Calder, with a deep affection for Joe and an acrid tongue to use against the Brills, cannot piecre their imperturbable conceit. And for all of his protests, he knows that no matter how far he travels, or how long he is away, he will always come back to Wickford Point.

Back he goes, to rescue the impecunious Brills, or to take refuge from them in the room that has been his since he was a child. He remembers Aunt Sarah, who used to get up every morning at 5 o'clock and read German and Italian before breakfast. Before supper she read Homer and wrote in her diary. Pepys was her favorite writer, and she thought Dickens not a gentleman. She could chop kindling, and did not like the smell of tobacco smoke. She was sensitive about that, because her mother used to smoke a pipe. There had been something between old John Brill and Aunt Sarah, but no one knew just how far the affair had gone. Her great admiration was for her father; her most startling reminiscences were of the underground railway.

AUNT SARAH is typical of Wickford Point. As Jim Calder's grandfather said, "I support the whole damn family, and they don't even know that I'm supporting them. By God, they take it for granted that I should support them . . Common sense was just left out of them," So much for his generation. As jim Calder grows up he sees Wickford Point "turning into a floating island and drifting imperceptibly away from the mainland of integrated values . . . cut off from the humdrum discipline of life." He watches the antics of Bella, Mary, Sid, Harry and Cousin Clothilde, thinks back to his childhood, retells the family stories. That is one side of his life. The other is his career as a professional writer, which brings him into closer contact with Joe Stowe, George Stanhope (the literary agent), Allen Southby (Harvard housemaster and prize prig), and Pat Leighton, with whom he is in love.

In the Saturday Evening Post "Wickford Point" is principally a tale of Bella's involvements with Joe Stowe and other gentlemen. It is a story of the jazz age, against a New England background. In book form, at least the first half of Wickford Point" is a very shrewd and intelligent study of an upper class New England family. The characters and the anecdotes are wonderfully well chosen and excellently handled. The interest lies in the contrast between generations. No one who has ever seen a New England family like the Brills could doubt the authenticity of the descriptions.

The book is also an expert job of writing. It jumps from past to present and back again without confusion, puts the spot on 20 different characters, each of whom is distinguished from the others in a sentence or two, and handles the various complications with equal skill. If anyone is tempted to think that such involutions are easily managed, let him try for himself. He will begin to understand Mr. Marquand's admiration for the craftsman, and scorn of the amateur, in fiction.

To get back to the point from which I started, let me remind you that the book gives one version of "Wickford Point," the serial another. In the Post the story is trimmed down. The plot is simpler, more direct, and moves faster. There is less emphasis on the past. A great deal of the background of the Brills has been cut. The characters have, therefore, less substance. The young people stand out, the older are less well defined. The job remains an expert one, but no better than other first-class slicks stories. Connoisseurs of New England will infinitely prefer their "Wickford Point" bound in boards, and as infinitely prefer the first to the last half of the book.

IN CLASSING "Today is Eneugh," by Ruth Lininger Dobson, with the slicks, I should say at once that I have no idea whether or not it has been printed in a magazine. But to my mind it has many of the vices and virtues of that kind of writing. The story is straightforward, and it is a story, with beginning, middle, and end. It is clearly told, and very little time is wasted on extraneous matters. It has warmth, and if the characters are not subtly analyzed, they are good, workmanlike, recognizable people. Occasionally it shows imagination, and occasionally a lack of it. Above all, it is written with common sense.

The Rev. John Stevens and his brand new wife, Judy, come to Hillville, where John has his first church. John was a poor boy, who educated himself by exhausting effort; Judy a child of the once rich, who has lived with "society people."

She has deliberately chosen to marry John instead of the rich Larry Grennan because she loved the young minister. She thinks she knows what her new life will be, but at first it deeply offends her. She is unprepared for the domestic crises of the poor. She is furious when John's already small salary is cut in half because the congregation can pay no more. She is bothered by the curiosity and the gossip of her small-town neighbors. She is bitter when John refuses to take time off to visit some of her lipstick friends. She is bright enough and kind enough, however, to recognize eventually the good qualities of the people of Hillville, and gradually her sympathies go out to many of them.

The crisis comes when she learns that John has worn out his frail body and is soon to die. In the midst of her suffering she realizes that her fear of his approaching death is robbing her of the happiness she can still have. After he does die, she finds her life purposeless, but when a catastrophe overtakes the town, she learns the solution of her problem.

"TODAY IS ENOUGH" is an honest effort to deal intelligently with everyday life. It should have earned its place in a magazine for its good sense, competence, and the speed with which it is told. Warwick Deeping's "Martin Valliant," on the other hand, could hardly find a home anywhere if the author had not made a name for himself. The story belongs to the "I wis and wot" school of historical fiction.

It concerns an objectionable monk named Brother Martin, whose fellow friars quite understandably dislike him because he so pure. He encounters a lovely girl, Mellis, who with her brother has come to England (they are Wars of the Roses exiles) to rouse the country against Richard Crookback and for Henry Tudor. To save Mellis from worse than death Martin defrocks himself and dons armor. Singlehanded he defeats party after party of her enemies (all singularly stupid in their methods of attack). Besides the physical struggle, there is a moral struggle confronting the recusant. By the time it is decided, the pair have forgotten all about Richard Crookback and Henry Tudor.

Of all types of the magazine novel this the worst. It is hard to believe that the story would serve to pass the time for anyone. Mr. Deeping should consult the first-class novel of the same period—"Under the Hog"—and find out how these things are done.

SINCE THE SLICKS put a high value on plot and technique, they often do better by short stories than by long. It would be hard to find more skillful handling than appears in those by Susan Ertz, some of which (perhaps all) have appeared in periodicals. There are 15 stories in the book. The title—"Big Frogs and Little Frogs"—is also that of the first tale. I hope that those who read this review will forget my outline of it, and so read the story unspoiled.

It is, briefly, about a woman who longs to conduct a brilliant conversation on the spot, but can only think what to say long after the chance of saying it has passed. She is a minor novelist, and so is invited to a dinner at which she is seated next to the Great Man of current literature. While he makes witty remarks to her, she has no idea what to answer. Afterwards—but it would be too bad to tell the end, and ruin a slight, ironic, wonderfully effective piece of writing.

Perhaps the opening story sets too high a standard. The 14 others are good, some of them excellent, but none of them matches the first. In case this seems to damn the book with high praise, let me say that this is probably a matter of my personal taste. Certainly, "Vulnerable"—which is about a woman whose unbounded fears lead her to cruelty and the very danger she was afraid of—could hardly be better of its kind. "Natural Enough" and "Family Man" are wisely considered stories of domestic complication. "You Got to Live" and "Hansi" are remarkable in their combination of warmth and humor.

Like Edith Wharton, Miss Ertz is at her best when she is using a cosmopolitan point of view. Her strictly American stories hardly ring true, but they are small failures in an otherwise highly successful collection. She is writing in a tradition that is now somewhat out of fashion but she can have the reward of knowing that, like everything else that is good, it will come back into style again and get the high regard that it deserves.

'A Terrible Tract For The Times'

Prof. Schuman's Angry Study Of Diplomacy

By Walter Millis.

THE COMBINATION of a thoroughgoing, exhaustive scholarship with a thoroughgoing, excoriating fury is rare enough to be exciting in itself. When Prof. Schuman turns such a combination upon the last half-dozen years of European diplomacy, the result is at once historical drama in the grand style and a terrible tract for the times, unrelieved in its picture of mediacity, weakness, knavery and imbecility, unmitigated in its proclamation of inevitable disaster.

It opens with a bang: "'Treason! Treason!' The little man [Goebbels] scribbled in his diary. Date: December 8, 1932. Place: Berlin. Mood: Despair. The danger now exists of the whole party's going to pieces.'" The Nazis were slipping; the politics of violence, falsehood and militant lust for power were failing. But at that moment the intriguer, Papen, intervened. Intending to make them the tools of the junkers, of the industrialists, of his own ambitions, this sly and blundering politician saved the Nazis in their critical moment—to the ultimate destruction of himself and of those vested interests which he served. It is an opening episode stating the whole theme of a big book:

This disposition of Fascism's enemies and victims to purchase peace by surrender was also duplicated on the larger stage of European diplomacy. The tragedy of national politics was to be replayed in international politics. . . . Here, as in every theater of combat, cowardice and stupidity are inevitably beaten by fanaticism. When madmen and paralytics strive for mastery of the world, the conclusion is foregone.

STEP BY DETAILED STEP this conclusion is pursued down the ensuing years, past the succession of historic tombstones which were to mark their unrolling—the death of disarmament, October 4, 1933; the death of Dollfuss, July 25, 1934; of the Versailles Treaty, March 16, 1935 (when Hitler announced rearmament); of Locarno, March 7, 1936; of Ethiopia, in 1936; of the League, when it shamefully acquiesced in that murder in the same year; of Austria, March 12, 1938; of Czecho Slovakia, and now imminently, of Republic Spain.

Throughout the whole period, to Prof. Schuman's mind, the one democratic statesman "with ability, foresight and a grasp of Realpolitik" was Louis Barthou, the French Foreign Minister who sought to call Soviet Russia back onto the Western scene in order to rebuild a "Grand Alliance" for the suppression of the Nazi threat. But Barthou died at Marseilles in October, 1934, under the bullets aimed at Alexander of Yugoslavia; the French and British politicians who succeeded him were "vote hunters pursuing popularity, administering dishonest policies with consistent firmness and honest policies with flabby vacillation."

HAILE SELASSIE
"The West will perish!"

"Under Laval's blighting hand the pact between Paris and Moscow had no life." Paralyzed by the bourgeois fear of bolshevism and bemused by the impossible hope of buying off Mussolini, the French authorized the Ethiopian adventure, in flagrant violation of every principle of collective security on which France had rested her own survival. There followed many tragi-comedies, as when the French witlessly permitted the reoccupation of the Rhineland or the British left the French in the lurch with the Anglo-German naval agreement.

There followed the popular revolt in England against the rape of Ethiopia and the great episode of sanctions, which the author presents as a deliberately dishonest farce. "Laval and Hoare would keep sanctions on a level which could not impede the Italian conquest . . . The enterprise was doomed because the responsible political leaders of France and Britain had at no time any desire that it should succeed . . . Mussolini was kept fully informed of the comedy in all its stages by Laval."

The appearance of Italian resentment and Anglo-French insistence was prearranged "by Baldwin to win an election, by Laval to win British support against the Reich and by Mussolini to give him the glory of a bogus victory over the world."

So it was played out, despite Haile Selassie's desperate final words:

"Do the peoples of the world not realize that I am standing guard in the last citadel of collective security? . . . I must still hold on until my tardy allies appear. If they never come then I say, prophetically and without bitterness: The West will perish."

And in China, in Spain and in Austria the prophecy marched to its fulfillment. In Austria the Catholic Church, which had applauded the assault on Ethiopia, "sought to protect itself from enemies who were harmless by allying herself with friends who were faithless or helpless . . . Here, too, those of wealth and title put the superstitions, prejudices and fancied interests of their class above their loyalty to the nation and to the democratic creed."

Over and over, in the minor theaters as well as the major ones, Prof. Schuman repeats in essence the same story of pusillanimity and bewilderment, illustrated by enormous detail, by many useful little sketches of the chief actors and by his always biting commentary—belying his prefatory announcement that the book is "analysis, not indictment" and that "sparing use is made of words of praise or blame." And so finally he comes up to the grand climax of 1938, when, from Nuremberg:

Over all the ether waves of the Western world came a roar like unto that of the beast of the Apocalypse. In it were mingled the hoarse voice of implacable fanaticism, with a lie or a threat in every breath, the fierce mob shouts of defiance and death; the hypnotizing and heart-rending monotony in every pause of "Sieg Heil! Sieg Heil! Sieg Heill!"

AND WHEN the democratic statement met the crisis by a passage which Prof. Schuman represents as one of almost unmitigated deceit, dishonest conspiracy and deliberate treachery. As early as the Austrian annexation, he suggests, the "Tory oligarchy" in Britain had decided upon the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia; the question was only whether "Hitler would wait for Downing Street to wear down Czech and French resistance or would resort to force at once." Hitler forced the May crisis "either to test whether the French bloc had already disintegrated under Tory and Nazi pressure, or to give Chamberlain new inducements to hasten a settlement on Berlin's terms."

The whole function of the Runciman mission, it is implied, was "to wear down Prague's resistance, to assist Chamberlain and his colleagues to ease their conscience and complete their deception of the British public." There is "no reason to doubt" that the Berchtesgaden "settlement" had been "agreed upon long before" the dramatic flight "was to build up an impression of crisis and imminent war which could be averted only by the partition of Czecho-Slovakia."

When the French were summoned to London, "the squat and pasty-faced French preimier with the weak mouth and shifty eyes was already intimidated and demoralized." Godesberg was playacting; the final war scare, the mobilizations of ships and troops and digging of trenches, were all at least tacitly "prearranged." The "hollow men" had their triumphant peace, compounded of calculation and mudle; it was actually "the sepulcher of all French power, all French hopes, all French dreams," the sepulcher of the British Empire, the end of Western democratic civilization.

THEY BOUGHT a peace and now the only issue is "not whether the Reich would strike again, but when and in what direction." The succeeding democratic maneuvers are pictured as mainly a desperate attempt to convince Hitler that his line of least resistance lies to the east not the west; since Mussolini has little to gain from a march against the Soviets, this maneuver necessitates fresh sacrifices to Mussolini in the west; that it will succeed in any event is doubtful.

"By midwinter of 1939 the prospects were that the western powers would suffer at least one more major diplomatic defeat, of which Mussolini would be the major beneficiary, before Hitler should make an irrevocable choice between east and west." But perhaps the great war will never come; already the Chamberlains and Daladiers may have so deeply inoculated their own democracies with the fear of war, with defeatism and pro-fascism that when the final issue is drawn there may be none left to resist.

On what theory of motivation or of the historical process does Prof. Schuman sustain so inherently incredible a record of "imbecilities, crimes and dishonesties?" Only at the end of the book does the clew appear: "The cause of the tragedy lies in inadequacy of cherished attitudes and habits resting upon accepted definitions of property and sovereignty in face of the exigencies of a new economy of abundance." Not one but two "tribes of 'barbarians,'" the author grants, threatened the western world society—fascism and communism. But for all their similarities, and for all the communists' crimes against the democratic ideal, it is still the communists who are "rationalists in a world of unreason, equalitarians in a world of tribal divinities."

If there was reason in the fear of communism, it should have been an incentive toward "removing the sources of mass misery and thereby diminishing the potential market for communism" in the democracies; if an alliance had to be made, the communists were better and safer allies than the fascists. But "the plutocracies and aristocracies of the west were incapable of such reorientation, "and instead betrayed themselves and their civilization to the Little Caesars." What hope remains now lies in America, but Prof. Schuman, with several tart remarks upon American policy, evidently does not regard it as a bright one.

IT IS THIS point of view which produces the excoriating judgments which lead to the point of view. The verdict is not reached through Prof. Schuman's bewildering battalions and regiments of historical fact; it is rather the facts which are marshaled by the verdict. While accepting the facts, therefore—in themselves an indispensable record of these epochal years—one may take the verdict or leave it alone. I am inclined myself to take it only with very severe reservations, at the same time confessing a private satisfaction that there are solid historians who can write with such passion, such dramatic intensity and so unconcealed a point of view.

"EUROPE ON THE EVE. The Crises of Diplomacy. 1933-1939," by Frederick L. Schuman. (Knopf, $3.50.)

Travel

"VENEZUELA," by Erna Ferguson. (Knopf, $3.)

THE FOOTLOOSE Miss Ferguson, after a book on Guatemala, has turned her restless attention to Venezuela. It is a timely book, for the outside world would know what changes the end of the Gomez tyranny has worked in the sprawling republic on the Spanish Main. The book should really be read as a sequel to Thomas Rourke's "Gomez, Tyrant of the Andes," to which work Miss Ferguson pays liberal tribute.

Though the general impression derived from reading the book is one of confusion, it is because Venezuela is passing through a period of adjustment in which confusion is inevitable. Release from the mold of the long depotism has suddenly brought with it new problems, political, economic, and social, which the country is ill-prepared to solve, except by trial and error. The foundations on which the new Venezuela must be built would daunt any architect of national destinies.

The composite is made up of survivals of coloniolism, the apotheosis of Bollvar, the Liberator; the mixed rancors and defeatism of those whose spirit was crushed or whose initiative was stifled by Gomez, distrust of the foreigner and doubt of the nation's own abilities, the courage of its women, and the enthusiasm of its youth. As a sense of futility seems to paralyze the energies of the older men, the task of reconstruction belongs to those youngsters. They still lack the trained minds and patience with administrative processes that are necessary to setting up an orderly democratic government and economy. But they are eager to learn, and though they should expect many headaches on the way, the country's fate could be in worse hands—in that of another Gomez, for example.

Miss Ferguson senses clearly all these elements in the situation. Though she misjudges the relative importance of some of the factors and frequently errs in details, the generaly accuracy of her observations is sound. No more should be expected of a casual traveler, conscientious and understanding though she be. Moreover, she did not gather her impressions in Caracas, but went up into the Andes to ancient Merida, flew across the llanos to San Fernando de Apure, visited Ciudad Bolivar on the Orinoco and the gold mines of El Callao, and included in her wanderings the petroleum port, Maracaybo, and Margarita, the island of pearls. She talked with people of every walk of life, and brought away with her a deep sympathy with their problems as Venezuelans. And about it all she has written entertainingly and intelligently—what is a first-rate travel book.

Kampf Vs. Kampf

"MEIN KAMPF," by Adolf Hitler. (Stackpole Sons, $3.)
"MEIN KAMPF," by Adolf Hitler. (Reynal & Hitchcock, $3.)

THESE RIVAL EDITIONS, presenting for the first time in English the full text of the Nazi Apocalypse are now involved in litigation before the Federal Courts. The Reynal Hitchcock edition is published by arrangement with the Houghton, Mifflin Co., holders of the original copyright and plaintiffs in the suit to restrain the Stackpole edition. This latter concern, however, maintains that the copyright is invalid because in 1925, when it was registered in America, Hitler, now the master of so much of the world, was technically an Austrian.

Whereas the truncated edition published by Houghton Mifflin in 1933 was read rather scornfully for what was deemed its psychopathological interest these current editions are being brought up feverishly by persons eager to know next month's and next year's foreign news before it happens. And it is indeed a weird and interesting experiment in relativity to read the confirmation of what one has just found in one's newspaper or just heard from one's radio in words written 15 years ago in Cell No. 7 in Landsberg Fortress.

Aside from legal and politico-ethical considerations (such as the Stackpole boast that that edition pays not a cent in royalties to Der Fuehrer and the Reynal & Hitchcock announcement that all net profits from their edition go to the refugees), there does not seem a great deal to choose between the two editions. Each shows signs of hurried preparation; each suffers gravely for want of an index. However, the Reynal & Hitchcock edition has the benefit of copious annotations by Dr. Alvin Johnson. These are of much benefit to readers unfamiliar with the historical mutations of post-war Germany, and are of great help in clarifying portions of the text. The conscientious Dr. Johnson also endeavored to trace Hitler's curious political and racial metaphysics to borrowings from Houston Stewart, Chamberlain, Gobineau, Neitzsche and—God help us!—Plato.

Still the unadorned Stackpole text is not without an advantage. It is the better translation, and here one gets the full frenzy of the revelation, the full impact of the barbarous rhetoric. Wave upon wave of prophetic words beat against the intelligence like iron-studded soles against a pavement.

Whitman's 'Brooklyn Freeman'

To the Book Editor of The Post—Sir: Inspired by the re-appearance of Poe's "Southern Literary Messenger," a project is under way to revive Walt Whitman's famous "Brooklyn Freeman." Unfortunately, it has been impossible for the intending publishers to locate a single copy of this paper. If any reader of this note knows of the existence of any such copy, word to this effect will be greatly appreciated by the writer of this letter, whose address is 197 Park Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Poetry

"SELECTED POEMS," by Sister M. Madeleva. (Macmillan, $1.60.)

UNFORTUNATE were those poetry devotees who last year missed reading a spare green volume called "Gates and Other Poems," by Sister M. Madeleva. But they are doubly fortunate now in having available in one book the best work of this distinguished Catholic poet.

If you are seeking the spectacular in verse or ultramodern tours de force, you will not find them here. Rather you will find poems of deep sincerity, disarming simplicity, and captivating lyricism. Though many of them are religious in emphasis, or inspired by a religious tradition and experience, other themes—love, nature, places—command this poet's attention. Some of here poems transcend definition and "achieve unusual passion and imagination;" for example, the poem titled "The Light:"

You do not know; you cannot, cannot guess
Across what burning sands I came to you;
Over what difficult hills, upon what new
Hard ways of loneliness.

You did not think of gifts—my piteous three;
Worthy I thought them — kings had such of old—
Do you but keep the frankincense and gold
And leave the myrrh to me.

Bid me, I will return into the night;
Remember only, you who merciful are,
I found you by the shining of a star,
So must I walk forever in its light.

The collection is brought to a close with a series of 21 sonnets, in which form, though competent, Sister Madeleva is not at her best. Her other lyrics, wherein she is able to exercise her own ingenuity in forms and rhythms, are more spontaneous and memorable.

"MODEL MEMOIRS." By Stephen Leacock. (Dodd Mead, $2.)

Leacock is loose again! He has assembled another collection of his witty and satirical pieces to add to the score of books he has had published in his long career in lunacy. True, many of these have already appeared in magazines, but scarcely any of us read all the magazines, so you needn't fear duplication. Anyway, I gladly re-read "My Victorian Girlhood" with the same degree of hysteria that it produced the first time. All I can say is that Little Audrey must have been reading something by Stephen Leacock when she first "laughed and laughed."

RAE LEWIS.

Of Matthew Arnold

By Ralph Utley

MATTHEW ARNOLD was the most influential critic of his day. He formed the literary opinion of our time, he has been compared to Aristotle in respect to his influence and the blind faith with which he has been followed. Mr. Trilling has attempted to show the development of the complex unity of his thought and to relate it to the events of his time.

Certainly one of the chief influences during his formative years was his famous father, Dr. Thomas Arnold, headmaster of Rugby. The gay waistcoats and mask of banter that young Arnold affected has led to the general opinion that he was the antithesis of his father. Mr. Trilling takes pains to show that in many ways he followed his father's footsteps. But the Arnold-Rugby influence was not limited to young Arnold; Mr. Trilling shows its effect to have been widespread and fundamental in nineteenth century England. In Matthew Arnold it is reflected in his insistence upon order, discipline and the need of authority in the hands of a strong centralized state.

The second influence—if not second in importance it was second chronologically—was the influence of the age in which he lived. The ideas that engendered the French Revolution and flowed out of it affected him tremendously: equality, rationalism, industrialism, "progress," anticlericalism, in short—romanticism. Mr. Trilling thinks that Matthew Arnold's thought and writing were an attempt to reconcile what he seems to imagine were two opposing trends, romanticism and rationalism. But rationalism is part of the romantic movement; it is, therefore, less confusing when Mr. Trilling states it in different terms, as he often does. He says Arnold attempted to reconcile "rationalism and faith," at other times he calls it "imagination and reason." "Poisoned from youth," Arnold wrote, "by all the writing of the last century, I had sucked at an early hour the sterile milk of impiety." Arnold's inability to love his mistress trustfully Mr. Trilling blames on the encyclopedists.

WE SMILE at the myths of the Greek or the myths of anyone at all; it is only our own myths that we take with ghastly seriousness. Such a modern myth, Arnold thought, was romantic love: love could only end in satiety, it was no solution; love and time, he said, were both temporary. He likewise denounced activity as an attempted escape; he saw the men and women of the nineteenth century rushing into this or that activity—the romantic violence of the Philistine liberals—in the attempt to escape from the responsibility of being themselves.

MATTHEW ARNOLD

The feudal relationships of personal loyalty were swept away, and modern man was in an impersonal world where the forms of society had been broken down; an atomic world, Arnold called it, for it was broken into its smallest units. Modern society had thrown responsibility on the individual—the solution was to be found in the self. By this Arnold meant the disinterested objectivity of the Greeks, as opposed to the prevailing subjectivity of the past 2,000 years introduced by Christianity; he sought to check romantic self-contemplation.

Arnold turned away from his mistress, his youth and his submersion in poetry almost simultaneously. He remained for a while saddened and depressed. Carlyle has said, "Close thy Byron; open thy Goethe:" it was time to leave the experience epoch and to resolve one's problems in work. Arnold's work was criticism. In this field Sainte-Beuve was his acknowledged master.

BY CRITICISM Arnold did not mean criticism of literature; he meant literature which was criticism of life. That, he stated, was the function of literature. He explained the close relationship between literature and life: literature should interpret and fortify life, it should comprehend the complexities of modern life, it should forge an affirmative attitude, it should determine the best thought of an age and disseminate it. Literature was not an ornament of life but one of its prime instruments.

Democracies, Arnold pointed out, must depend upon literature (and a strong state) to replace the field previously occupied by the aristocracy, whose function it had been to give society its tone. Mr. Trilling quotes Tocqueville's book on America, "In aristocratic ages vast ideas are commonly entertained of the dignity, the powers and the greatness of man. These exert their influence on those who cultivate the sciences as well as on the rest of the community." This responsibility, Arnold argued, should be assumed by literature; literature should give man dignity, nobility and objectivity.

Culture, Arnold explained, was the love and study of perfection; like religion it was an inward condition of the individual, but it was not subjectivism, for it never excluded the realities of the outer world. Culture, he added, goes beyond religion in that it conceives perfection to be the "harmonious expansion of all the powers which make the beauty and worth of human nature." Mr. Trilling thinks that the key to Arnold's intellectual life is to be found in Arnold's book, "Culture and Anarchy."

The few biographical details which Mr. Trilling gives are collected in the last chapter, where he describes Arnold's lecture tour to America. It was by these lectures (published under the title, "Discourses in America") that Arnold said he wished to be remembered. One of the lectures, subtitled "The Majority and the Remnant," made the point that the hope of any society lay in its minority or remnant: America's hope of survival lay in the possibility that she would produce a larger minority than had ever been produced before.

Andrew Carnegie considered himself one of the remnant and invited Arnold to dinner. But Arnold was impressed by the lack of distinction in the United States; he attributed this to the newspapers, which destroyed the Nation's "discipline of awe and respect." He found in all of American history but two men of distinction, Washington and Hamilton, who were both pre-American.

MR. TRILLING has interlarded this study of Matthew Arnold with the dialectic, Karl Marx, the failure of the middle class, examples of "thesis" and "antithesis," with Hegel's justification of force and consequent dismissal of liberal morality, with a number of pages on race and many more pages of the theory of the state. What all this has to do with Matthew Arnold, who tried "to see the object as it really is, and who, he admits, never even read Marx, is impossible to say. Arnold himself would probably have complained that Mr. Trilling's book was "atomic" like modern society, lacking form, centrality and discipline.

Probate Practice

"PROBATE PRACTICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA," by Victor S. Mersch. (Privately published, $6.)

BY REASON of the recent changes in the procedure of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, the publication of such a book at this time is particularly appropriate. Victor Sylvester Mersch is well qualified to write a book of this nature. He is a former associate editor of the Georgetown Law Journal. His "Voluntary Payment to Foreign Administrator" (18 Georgetown Law Journal 130) has been cited in works on wills as well as works on conflict of laws. His article "Is Tifft v. Porter Modified?" (The Fordham Law Review for November, 1938) indicates that Tifft v. Porter as now interpreted in New York supports the decision of the majority in Vogel v. Saunders, 92 F. (2) 984 (App. D. C. 1937). In 1927 Col. Theodore Cokswell appointed Mr. Mersch his First Deputy Register of Wills for the District of Columbia. This position requires him to pass daily upon current technical questions of probate law.

He has arranged the material of this volume so as to facilitate the paper work of lawyers practicing in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia sitting in Probate. Thus he has provided a reference book from which a lawyer may easily follow the procedure entailed, including forms used from the filing of a will to the granting of letters testamentary, or in the case of an intestacy the issuance of letters of administration, as well as the accounting for and management of estates. However, Mr. Mersch points out that, when rightly used, forms are but guide posts for presenting facts, and while they may indicate some part of the substantive law and the rules of the court, they are no substitute for them.

In support of his various points, Mr. Mersch refers to the code of laws for the District of Columbia and gives the citations of the deciding cases thereupon. The chapter of estate management is far more complete than any other volume so far written on this subject, and the chapter on the problems of distribution appears to be entirely new.

The index, although consolidated to save space, adequately covers the book. In the appendix, Mr. Mersch has incorporated the probate rules and th ecivil rule applicable thereto; supplement 3 of the District of Columbia code; adoption, descents, distribution and estates of absentees and absconders; the District of Columbia inheritance and estate tax act amendment approved by act of May 16, 1938, and the District of Columbia inheritance and estate tax regulations.

As unusual cases pass before Mr. Mersch, who also acts as clerk of probate court, he makes notes of the legal points. In the evening, on many occasions, you will find him in the Bar Association library searching out authority on elusive points not settled during the day, or writing a review of some legal textbook relating to probate matters.

"Probate Court Practice in the District of Columbia" deserves a place in every local lawyer's library.

EDWARD R. HALLORAN.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, MARCH 19, 1939

War Tensity Puts Pall On D. C. Social Gaiety

Predicament of Popular Czech Envoy Stirs Tide of Sympathy, Marks Third Diplomatic Upheaval in Capital

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

PARTIES-A-PLENTY continue to accent the social scene, but there's a war-time tenseness in many a gathering, muted whispers about the effect here of the upheaval in Europe and openly-voiced conjectures on all sides as to what will happen to Col. Vladimir Hurban, who since 1936 has represented a country that now is no more.

One of Washington's most popular couples, Col. and Mme. Hurban now find themselves in a position that is no longer unique. Last spring, when Austria bowed out of the international picture, a stupendous wave of sympathy for the former Envoy and Mme. Prochnik swept over Capital circles. Friends flocked to the legation on Massachusetts avenue to condole with a couple that long has been a part of Washington's diplomatic and social life.

IN CONTRAST to the attitude recently displayed by Col. Hurban, Edgar Prochnik capitulated without allowing himself a single gesture. When orders were issued from the German Embassy that the Nazi fly should fly over the Austrian legation, it went up at once. Mr. and Mme. Prochnik maintained a silence that was diplomatic enough but also surprising; and in no time at all they packed their belongings and quietly moved out of the legation to make their life henceforth as private citizens.

To all appearances, furthermore, they were on extremely friendly terms with members of the Germany embassy staff. And soon the rumor was circulating freely that this was because the Nazi government was to give Mr. Prochnik a pension. I understand the latter hasn't come through yet, but the smooth relationship between the former Austrian envoy and Germany's Charge d'Affaires, Dr. Hans Thomsen, seems to continue regardless.

CHANCES ARE, in the case of the Hurbans . . . history of this type won't repeat itself. I can't see the plucky little Czecho-Slovak envoy giving in without a struggle. The tide of sympathy sweeping toward him and his wife already has gathered momentum because of his refusal to take orders, yet, from the Nazi government.

Close friends of the Hurbans say it's a sure thing they will make their home permanently in this country, either here or in New York, more likely in the latter city. There are scores of Washingtonians who hope they will stay here.

The recent arrival of several relatives of the Spanish Ambassador and Senora de los Rios bears out the report that after the Spanish situation is sifted down and changes at the Embassy are brought about, Dr. and Senora de los Rios, and their family will remain in this country to make their home. It's a great compliment to America when foreign notables divested of their position stay on here to live. But as someone said over the teacups yesterday, "After all, where else is there to go—if

Miss Whitford Becomes Bride At St. Alban's

Rev. Mr. Warner Officiates At Candlelight Ceremony

IN A SETTING of candlelight and calla lilies, Miss Ordway Whitford, daughter of Mrs. George Langdon Whitford, of the Dresden Apartments, was married yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock to Burton Grant Wadsworth, of Danville, Va., son of Mrs. Natt Burton Wadsworth, of Warner, N. H. The ceremony took place at St. Alban's Church, the Rev. Charles T. Warner, the rector, officiating.

The bride was given in marriageby her uncle, Nehemiah Ordway Whitford, of Concord, N. H. Her gown of cream colored satin was made on princess lines, and her tulle veil was attached to a coronet of real orange blossoms. She carried a white prayer book with a shower of lilies of the valley and orange blossoms.

HER MAID OF HONOR and only attendant was her sister, Miss Harriet Stearns Whitford. The latter wore a costume of violet satin with a hoop skirt, and carried a tiny muff of Johanna Hill roses, lavender sweet peas and deep purple anemones.

Aston Howlett, of New Hampshire, brother-in-law of the bridegroom was best man, and the

Sen. and Mrs. Andrews Plan Florida Trip

They Overlooked Home Town In Recent Visit to State, Thus the Contemplated Tour

By Elizabeth Ford.

SENATOR AND MRS. CHARLES O. ANDREWS, of Florida, were down in their home State recently, but not in their home town. Mrs. Andrews has decided, definitely, that omitting Orlando on their fling to the palmy peninsula was an oversight. Consequently they will be pouring another ration of gasoline into the family car and rolling down U. S. 1 the latter part of this month. They plan to pass spring on the northbound track at least half way.

Off for the fair and anything else New York has to show are Senator and Mrs. James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania. Their call on Manhattan will be a brief one, and they plan to be back in the Capital tomorrow.

Still others who are weekending in New York City are Representative and Mrs. Robert G. Allen, also of Pennsylvania. While there they will reunion with Mrs. Frederick Williamson, Mrs. Allen's mother. Mrs. Williamson does not live in New York, but like many another these days is taking in a little spring shopping between the Plaza and Forty-second street.

SENATOR and Mrs. Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, were on the honor roll at the tea given yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Tully Nettleton. The event took place at the Little Tea House (over the Memorial Bridge and away you go). It seems that Mr. Nettleton, who is Washington editorial writer for the Christian Science Monitor, will leave today for Boson to fill the shoes and desk of chief editorial writer for the Monitor during the next three months. So . . . he thought a farewell party was in order.

Those working shifts at the urn and punch bowl yesterday included Mrs. Wesley Disney, wife of Representative Disney, of Oklahoma; Mrs. Thomas J. Lee, sister-in-law of Senator Lee; Mrs. Lillian Cox Athey, Mrs. Erwin D. Canham, Mrs. Wilford White, Mrs. Howard Blanchard and Mrs. Dorothy Hulfizer.

AMONG THOSE present from the Oklahoma delegation were Representative and Mrs. Wilburn Cartwright, Representative and Mrs. Will Rogers, Representative and Mrs. Lyle H. Boren, Representative and Mrs. Sam C. Massingale, Representative and Mrs. Mike Monroney, and Representative and Mrs. Jed Johnson.

Still others at the party were Senator and Mrs. Alexander Wiley, of Wisconsin; Mr. and Mrs. Maurice H. Thatcher, Mr. and Mrs. Preston McGoodwin. Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Walker and dozens of others.

Apparel Addenda; Mrs. Lee was gowned in teal blue chiffon fashioned with a flared skirt and trimmed with magneta. Mrs. Nettleton was attired in a "gypsy" frock styled with a wide taffeta skirt in black and white checks and an embroidered batiste blouse.

INCIDENTALLY, Mrs. Lee will soon be giving some parties for Mrs. Donnelly Reid, president of the Jeffersonian Club, of Oklahoma City. Mrs. Reid is coming to the Capital as delegate to the Democratic Women's Club convention.

SENATOR Sheridan Downey, of California, is up on his Latin and algebra. Or else he had better be. His son, Richard Downey, a student at Western High School, is carrying a heavy schedule of equations and declensions these days . . . and he's a shark at statistics. Little Patricia Downey, who is 11 years old, is still in grade school.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Hatch, son and daughter-in-law of Senator and Mrs. Carl Hatch, of New Mexico, had as their guests during the week Mrs. L. B. Simmons and Dr. and Mrs. Howard Alspaugh. The visitors who arrived on Wednesday morning are on their way to New York. Mrs. Stewart Hatch was formerly Miss Olivia Stokes.

MRS. HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, wife of Representative Englebright, of California, was one of the hostesses for the dinner and bridge which took place early in the week at the Congressional Club. Mrs. August H. Andresen, wife of Representative Andresen, was another hostess for the same party.

TRUE ENOUGH: Representative William Lemke, of North Dakota studied law at the George Washington University Law School in Georgetown . . . You can get a good view of the Capitol dome from Carroll Hall; Representative James W. Mott, of Oregon, was once a newspaper man; Representative Guy L. Moser, of Pennsylvania, has a dozen good reasons for being in Congress . . . 12 of his ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War.

Top Hats and Tiaras

By Betty Beale

SOCIETY'S BAROMETER of the social tempo is the morning mail. Along with the proverbial bacon and eggs breakfast is enhanced by all sorts and sizes of invitations. Now after a month of comparative quiet (when fashionable Washingtonians had time to digest their newspapers with their coffee) the local postmen's heavier burdens heralded the approach of the Little Season. The party graph is definitely on the up and up.

One of the better dinners of the year is scheduled for tonight when Fred Roy will entertain a group of friends in the private dining room of the Army and Navy Club. After dinner while the coffee is being served, a screen will be erected at one end of the room and thereon will follow a candid camera lecture by Prof. Roy in person, accompanied by illustrated slides representing every guest present. Just what the pictures will look like or what the professor will divulge about them is all a mystery for the present, but we do know parts of it have been inspired by certain scenes from the Junior League Follies.

THOSE WHO will be initiated into this rare treat of seeing themselves as they may have appeared in perhaps the Gay Nineties (your guess is good as ours) are Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sims, Mr. and Mrs. Newbold Noyes, Comdr. and Mrs. Atherton Macondray, the Reber Littlehales, the Lewis Clarks, Mr. and Mrs. William Flather, Ello and Marshall Exnicios, Teena and Reeve Hoover, Mrs. Sutherland Mayo, Mr. and Mrs. Winslow van Devanter, Enid Snow, Will Ryan, Charles Hume, Mrs. Emory Smith, Nancy Mann, Merritt Swift, Donald Downs and Mrs. Langhorne Bond. The latter's husband has just returned to China after a several weeks' visit in this country. Kitsy will join him later in the spring.

ALICE DODGE entertained her friends the other afternoon in her new abode in Georgetown. The house has that charming atmosphere that comes only from the combination of the old and new in interior decoration. In the living room, with gray walls setting off the yellow hangings and yellow rug, are two fireplaces. The reverse color motif is in the dining room, with curtains of warm gray against pale yellow walls. Among the guests celebrating the house warming were Madame Fotitch, the wife of the Yugoslavian Minister, the Counselor of the Danish Legation and Mme. Eickhoff, Dorothy and Charles Agle, the former hatless and in a stunning suit with white ruffled blouse, Dorsey Fisher, Betty and Bill Sprague, Mannix Walker, Kemper Simpson, Elvira Elbrick and Will Ryan. Elvira's husband, Burke Elbrick, sails from Europe the twenty-third of this month to join his wife for a month's home leave from his foreign service post in Warsaw.

PARTIES ON THE CALENDAR:

Willa McGee will be honor guest at a small cocktail party this afternoon given by Laura Tuckerman . . . Mr. and Mrs. Livingston Hartley will entertain at cocktails on the twenty-first and the same afternoon Houston Niller will give a party for Caroline and Tommy Adams . . . Anne Moorehead will have a birthday dinner at the Pirates Den the twenty-fourth . . . Margaret and Bill Lacy will be hosts at dinner on March 30 . . . Patricia Donovan will have a dance at the F Street Club on April 4 . . . Mr. and Mrs. Walter Edge will give a dance on April 10 at the F Street Club . . . Helen and Atherton Macondray will entertain at dinner on April 14 before the Thrift Shop ball at the Sulgrave Club.

Miss Blanchard Engaged to Wed

Col. R. M. Blanchard, U. S. A., retired, and Mrs. Blanchard, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary DeWitt Blanchard, to Lieut. Joseph Williams, Infantry, U. S. Army, son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Williams, of Mount Carmel, Ill.

Miss Blanchard is a granddaughter of the late Brig. Gen. Calvin DeWitt and Mrs. DeWitt, of Washington, and the niece of Maj. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commandant of the Army War College; Brig. Gen. About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

LITTLE ANGLES ON BIG PARTIES:

There's a teetotaling trend noticeable at Sulgrave Club dances recently. Up to 100 pints of sweet milk and buttermilk are now being consumed at such parties there. Milk is especially in demand around driving-home time.

Sidney, who plays at most of the smart dances in the Capital, tells us there's one hostess who, when she entertains annually at a large ball, always has the orchestra end up the party by marching all around the house and then out into the street. She discovered that such is the only way to convince the guests that the party is really over.

A PLEASANT custom has always held sway at dances in the Italian Embassy—when the weather is fair. Led by the band, almost the entire assemblage does a snake dance through the drawingroom out into the patio and around the fountain there.

DANCES at the British Embassy always close impressively. Just before the finish Sidney leads the orchestra in "John Peel," which is the signal for the guests to join hands in a circle and prance around. This is always followed in true British style by "God Save the King."

Meyer Davis may cherish the photostat copy of a $10,000 check from Peter Widener for playing at the debut of his step-daughter, but Washington prices are never anywhere near as lavish. A little less than $1,000 is the usual price for a good orchestra at a large dance here. Occasionally hostesses will send along an additional check with the instructions that the orchestra members use it for a champagne bust.

A LEADING orchestra director here allows his players one drink an hour during a party—but never champagne. He finds that when they sample the latter it is irresistible to follow up one drink with another.

SIDNEY once had the job of furnishing music while Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean, Mrs. Warren Harding and their men partners dealt cards at a bridge game. When the deal was finished, the musicians stopped while the hands were being played, then resumed again as cards were distributed.

MOST lavish menus at Cabinet "at homes" are furnished by Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General. Hers include tureens of creamed oysters, salads, huge rich cakes, sandwiches, great bowls of ice cream and petits fours. Simplest food is that served by the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins, who offers her "at home" guests tea and cookies.

THE MOST LAVISH party, in Washington or elsewhere, could never equal in sheer glamour one given by the French Ambassador to Russia in the early nineteenth century. John Quincy Adams, who was then our minister to that country, describes its breath-taking qualities in a letter he wrote to his family then:

"At half past 4," he wrote, "I went to the ambassador's hotel, at the outer door of which stood the porter, or Swiss, in full dressed livery, deeply bordered with gold lace, a three-cornered hat, also gold laced, a broad girdle of cloth passing over from the right shoulder to the left side, boardered with gold lace and worked with gold embroidery, and a large thick staff about 5 feet long, and headed with silver . . .

ON THE STEPS of the staircase stood a line of 20 footmen, reaching from the bottom to the top of the stairs, all in the same livery as the Swiss expecting the girdle, staff and hat, and in silk stockings instead of boots. They stand like so many statues, and are there merely for the magnificence of the show. At the top of the staircase . . . stood two chasseurs with pea green liveries . . . In the second antichamber was a line of eight upper servants, above the rank of footmen and chasseurs, in uniform dresses embroidered in gold but of the same colors with all the liveries . . . In the third antichamber the guests were received by the ambassador's secretaries and by the French consul. The ambassador himself stood in the salon, near the door of the entrance."

THE BEAUTIFUL damask, the magnificent service of Sevres porcelain, and the French cooking are further described by the great American statesman who, turning society reporter for once, has left an interesting record of vanished glories which will never be equaled again.

In Diplomatic Circles:

Ghiraldo Is Promoted By Argentina

Embassy Counselor To Be Transferred Within Short Time

By Nancy Archibald.

JUST TWO SUMMERS ago Don Hector Luiz Ghiraldo, who is dark and handsome in the Valentino tradition, and Senora de Ghiraldo, who also is striking in appearance, with her gold-red hair, blue eyes and rose-petal cheeks, arrived in Washington from far-off Buenos Aires, and Senor Ghiraldo plunged into his work as counselor at the Argentine Embassy. The flock of friends who have gathered round the couple since and have watched their baby boy, Don Hector, jr., grow from an infant in arms to a young lad who dashes about trailing toys along and chattering gaily in several different languages, did not know whether to rejoice or mourn when they learned yesterday that Senor Ghiraldo has been promoted to the rank of minister and that within several months he will be transferred to another country. Senor Ghiraldo has held posts at Stockholm, Lisbon and Buenos Aires, and was a member of the Chaco Boundary Commission, and later the Pan-American Peace Conference, which President Roosevelt attended.

EPOCH-MAKING was the occasion of the presentation of credentials by Ambassador Carlos Martins Periere e Sousa, of Brazil. As the President himself pointed out, this was the first instance on record of an ambassador having been introduced by his own foreign minister to the President of the United States; also the first instance of the Secretary of State's presence at such a ceremony. Indeed, everything about which Minister Aranha is concerned seems to have an air of special drama. When he sailed for Rio on the S. S. Argentina the decks looked like a grand rally of Brazilian residents in the U. S. and when the orchestra struck up a Brazilian carnival song the chorus shook the portholes . . . until someone caught the eye of the minister, who was trying to answer audibly to the questions of the newspapermen.

FAREWELLS AND WELCOMES overlapped at the party given by the retiring Naval Attache of the Brazilian Embassy, Commander Reis as the new attache, Commander Olavo de Araujo, was greeted. During the World War Commander Araujo, who comes from Rio Grande de Sol, was attached to the Royal Naval Air Forces, but a severe accident prevented his continuing in aviation. He was attached for six years to the Brazilian Embassy in London, where he worked with Senor Sousa Leao, recent counselor here. Mme. Araujo is English and made many American friends while her husband was attached to the American Naval Commission in Rio. Her three sons, Nestor Leonard, who is 9, Oscar Eduard, who is 11, and 6-foot Victor Ricardo, who is 17, and will study diplomacy at Georgetown University, keep her very busy, indeed.

ART LOVERS look forward to the arrival of Luiz Crespo, brother of First Secretary of the Ecuador Embassy Manuel Crespo. He specializes in portraits, so realistic that some critics object to his chromatic ability, but his genius for showing texture and sculpture in his subjects resembles the work of the old school of Dutch painters headed by Holbein. Senor Crespo was sent by his government to study in France and Spain and is considered on of the most outstanding artists abroad. He is handsome and witty and his brother hopes he will show one or two of his paintings during his visit here.

West Point's Class of '24 Reminisces at Dinner

By Elizabeth Henney.

"THE THUNDERING HERD" is thundering again, and last night was their night to howl which they did—at the Hamilton Hotel. In case you're a bit bewildered, "The Thundering Herd" is the famous West Point Class of 1924, the largest class ever to graduate from the military academy. When they entered, there were more than 600 of them. There is a touching poem in their yearbook about it, written to the meter of the Charge of the Light Brigade. On graduation day all that remained of the noble 600 were 406, which, however, still stands as the high at West Point.

Last night the members of that class who are stationed in or around Washington got together for a class dinner. Guest speaker was Maj. Gen. Robert M. Danford, Chief of Field Artillery. During the first years of that class' four-year term, Gen. Danford, then colonel, was commandant of cadets, and Gen. Douglas McArthur (called by the cadets "King Arthur") was superintendent of the academy. Both officers won the complete admiration, respect and almost reverence of the entire corps of cadets. Seldom have two commanding officers won such an accolade from "The Corps," none have better deserved it.

OTHER HONOR GUESTS were Col. William A. Mitchell, who was professor at West Point for many years; Col. Alexander D. Surles, Col. Oscar Griswold, Col. John S. Homer, Col. Richard D. Newman, Col. Holland L. Robb, Col. R. C. Smith, and Capt. Steven L. Conner.

Members of the class who attended included Capt. William H. Maglin, of the University of Maryland; Capt. Philip R. Garges and Capt. Fisher S. Blinn, both of Fort Belvoir, Va.; Capt. George Lightcap, Capt. Howard Ker, John Outcalt, Lieut. Gerald J. Sullivan, retired; Capt. H. A. Malin, Capt. C. R. Landon and Capt. Benjamin S. Mesick.

ARMY NEWS: Mrs. George A. Lynch, wife of the Chief of Infantry, returned on Friday from a motor trip to New York and Governor's Island. She was accompanied by her son, Bradford Lynch.

Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds, Surgeon General of the Army, returned Thursday from an inspection trip that included Fort Leavenworth, Chicago and several other points.

Mrs. Emory S. Adams, wife of Maj. Gen. Adams, the Adjutant General, has come back from a grand "junket." During the recent vacation of the Cathedral School, she gathered up her niece, Miss Elies Yeates, who attends there, and accompanied by a cousin, Mrs. William Dean, they motored up to West Point for the 100th night celebration. Then, to make a good trip even better, they stopped off at New York and Princeton University on their way back, and arrived in Washington last Tuesday evening.

Col. and Mrs. Charles K. Nulsen, who are stationed in Charleston, W. Va., will arrive in Washington in the next day or two, for a week's visit with their daughter, Marian, who attends Miss Madeira's School.

Officers on duty at Walter Reed Hospital and their wives frolicked on Friday at the hop at Sternberg Auditorium, at the Medical Center.

Molly Pender Brown, daughter of Mrs. George C. Marshall, who is wife of Brig. Gen. Marshall, Deputy Chief of Staff, said a regretful good-by to some delightful house guests the early part of this week. Miss Margery Street, of Chicago, and Mrs. Grosvenor Compton, of Wayne, Ill., had been visiting her for several days.

NAVY NOTES: Orders in the Navy Yard are coming up as fast as the crocuses, and soon the screech of pounded nails and the pungent fragrance of excelsior will permeate the air.

Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Brown have received their orders to go to New York and probably will soon be saving newspapers (I hope they save The Washington Posts) to pack their extra specially China in, as most service families do. They expect to leave some time in May.

WATCH YOUR THROAT LINE

The first place to show the march of the years, the first place to show the sign of neglected skin care...upon it depends half the beauty of your face.

It must be firmed, toned, soothed, as only Elizabeth Arden knows how...patted and smoothed by deft hands...toned and soothed by the creams and lotions which have made the Elizabeth Arden Salon Treatments the most famous in the world.

For Miss Arden believes that your face begins at the base of your throat...that so much of the loveliness of the face itself depends on the throat's firm strength, just as the glory of a flower depends on the grace of its stem.

All the Elizabeth Arden Salon Face Treatments include this care for the throat-line. Its perfection is part of the "Elizabeth Arden look".

Take an equal portion of imagination and determination and let them come to a slow boil. When thick enough to form a decision, make a shoe that is different from any other shoe that has ever been designed. In the meantime, build a factory filled with sunshine and large enough to hold 3000 or more skilled artisans. Next scour the world for the finest and most durable leathers. The steppes of Russia, the slopes of the Andes, the plains of Australia, the swamps of Mexico are reliable sources. Over a period of fifty years continue to mix the decision and the leather, adding from time to time, scientific, unusual, long-needed shoe features. Stir in an extraordinary helping of smartest fashion, mould in an exclusive design and serve. You will have a shoe that is simply dee-licious and one that is all "Selby."

War Tensity Quiets Society In Capital

Czech Crisis Is Third Diplomatic Upheaval Here

you want to live in a democracy that has a chance to survive?"

THE PALL that has settled over Washington recently because of the international situation, was lifted for a sizeable number of residents last evening when the Capital's first Political Cabaret got under way. Offering "something new in night life," the event drew a representative number of notables, who were entertained with a floor show made up of 14 acts.

Topical subjects were presented by sketches in the review, which was designed "not only to divert Washington, but to make it think for a change." The second floor at 1423 Pennsylvania avenue was, and will be, the scene of the non-profit-making venture which last evening was enlivened with lampooning skits, snappy songs, and a couple of dances that had the audience clamoring for more.

GUESTS found their tables tied up in red tape, which had to be cut before they could be seated. Then they settled down to enjoy the floor show, which was staged by Nicholas Ray and included in its cast a number of persons who have appeared in local theater productions. The skits, the music and the lyrics were written by a staff made up of Freda Berla, Bernard C. Schoenfeld, Cook Glasgold, Donald Cameron and Derek Fox.

The list of songs that brought down the house included such provocative titles as "Girl Meets Boycott," "Love on Relief," "Swing Into Action," and "What's My Civil Service Rating With You?" Skits that drew the biggest applause were "Ask Me Another True or False Question, Please," "Is There A Doctor in the House?" "D. A. R. Apology," and "Move Over Please."

ABOUT THREE months ago a group gathered to make plans for this type of entertainment; and the Political Cabaret, which is to go on the boards each Saturday night, is the result. Whitney Atchley is in charge of setting; Cook Glasgold is production manager, and Sophia Delza plans the dances. Judging from the way last evening's audience took to the entertainment, you'll be hearing a lot about this new slice of night life before the season is over.

Among those who had reservations for the opening night were Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Gruening; Mr. and Mrs. Michael Straus, who were there with Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Horton, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Mrs. Harry Baxter, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond C. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome M. Frank, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Fortas, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Westwood, Miss Mary LaFollette, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Huse, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Witt, and many others.

PRINTS—Washington's favorite prelude to spring

They Enliven the Spring and Summer Scene With True American Vivacity

Schiaparelli, Creed, Bruyere and many other well-known Paris couturiers have brought forth many unusual and charming prints for the 1939 spring and summer seasons . . . we admire and enjoy them, but it still remains an American custom to do them the best. This passion for prints is our pride, and this season's are no exception. They are the most figure-flattering of any that have been shown in years, for they are generally very neat, small, and muchly duo-toned.

If you feel that now is the time to infuse a few lively prints into the quiet tenor of your life, here are some excellent suggestions: 1—A demure little polka-dot on a soft grey background. Vividly splashed here and there with gay chartreuse. 2—A coat and dress ensemble that illustrates the newest in both prints and silhouettes. Conventionalized chartreuse flowers bloom on a bed of chocolate brown. Like the coat, the dress is pique trimmed. 3—An abstract design that flutters on a quiet ground of cinnamon. Under the distinctive six-button double-breasted jacket there is a dress top of aqua sheer.

4—Undulating black ribbons laced with fine black lines make a very sophisticated print dress that can easily find favor in your eyes. Front fullness and a youthful V neck also make it flattering. Two bright red apples are a witty touch. 5—Believe it or not, culottes for evening! The leg of each is as full as the average evening skirt. The hood and blouse are both faced with a brilliant stop-light red, and the wide suede girdle is of the same color. The print is a capri blue coin dot on a brown ground. Very stunning. 6—The scene wouldn't be complete without at least one gypsy dress. Here's a multi-colored, Romany-striped chiffon with butterfly patent belt.

'Y. W.' Group Studies Housing Problems

Unwholesome, Inconvenient Living Conditions Unearthed; Landlady's Side Also Given Attention

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

There are two sides to the rooming house problem—the guests and the landlady's—members of the Y. W. C. A. group studying housing under the leadership of Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, executive director of the Washington Housing Association, have discovered. The girls are studying the problem first hand and discussing possible solutions of various phases of it.

Many mansions which were the scenes of some of the Capital's most fashionable functions back in the gay 90's are now rooming houses wkith from 30 to 50 occupants. Sometimes the sign "vacancy" means a bed for rent in a large room having three or four other tenants. It may mean a little room on the top floor, four flights up under the roof of the once fine residence, with a single bathroom for 15 persons.

For the girl on a low income, this means living conditions which are unwholesome and inconvenient. For the landlady the overcrowding represents her means of earning a livelihood from a huge old house for which she pays high rent.

Some of the old places which now house "paying guests" have been remodeled for the purpose and equipped with an adequate number of baths, says Mrs. Hoffman, but there are many in which conditions are neither sanitary nor safe.

MRS HELEN D. HOFFMAN

Make Check of Own Rooms

The Y girls who gathered in the study group began by checking their own rooms by the ten basic rules requiring: Light, air, space, privacy, sanitation, safety, cleanliness, conveniences, comforts, beauty. One by one some of these had to be ruled out, even in rooms renting for $50 a month with windows opening on airshafts in converted palatial residences.

The choice lies between this type of room in a downtown location within walking distance of work—or a room in a private home far out on a bus or streetcar line where most of the basic needs are met. But there is the extra $5 for transportation, not to mention the long ride in a crowded car or bus. And there is the problem of the boy friend—where to entertain him and the extra cost and time to him when he takes the girl friend home at night.

Some of the landladies, as much concerned for the comfort and well being of the girls to whom they rent rooms as they would be for that of their own daughters, permit them the privilege of the kitchen when they desire to cook, provide facilities for them to wash their lingerie and a place for them to entertain the boy friends.

Others, who rent rooms because they know no other way to make ends meet, and who have no interest in their guests except the rent they pay, do nothing in the spirit of friendliness for their comfort or happiness.

Plans Novel Class Next Year

Members of the study group are learning how to check a room and approach the situation from the standpoint of the renter. Mrs. Hoffman hopes to conduct a class next season, if possible, for those who operate rooming houses, to help solve their side of the problem.

An understanding between the hostess and the paying guest in the beginning as to the use of electricity and gas, hours when the house must be quiet, the use of the kitchen and the living room and other such rules will prevent misunderstanding and arguments later, Mrs. Hoffman points out.

Another need, says Mrs. Hoffman, is for a registry of the roomers, whether in private residences where there are but two or three or in larger rooming houses, giving their home addresses and the name of a relative or friend with whom to communicate in case of illness or accident.

The Y. W. C. A. is one of the agencies in Washington which lists available rooms on application from the landlady. When an application comes, 2 of the 22 members of the volunteer committee, headed by Mrs. Frank Ballou, visit the house to determine whether the surroundings meet the requirements of the "Y" for a room it will recommend. Girls who come there for lodging usually expect to stay at one of the Y. W. C. A. residences, and do so unless all accommodations are taken. It is then that they are referred to rooms in private homes.

JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL teachers meet Thursday for a demonstration of events to be presented at the annual spring play day, which is to be an open air affair this year with 30 girls participating. The number is twice that of last year. At the demonstration, teachers will be shown the approved method of teaching each activity so that when the schools come together there will be uniformity in their performance.

GIRLS CLUB, organized by the Community Center Department last summer has been having basketball league competition under the direction of Marjorie Quilter. Results of those games played so far are: Woodrow Wilson, 16, Anacostia, 17; Anacostia, 28, Powell, 22; and Woodrow Wilson, 20, Anacostia, 18.

Volleyball has also been popular with girls, and interclub games are being planned.

GUNSTON HALL students defeated their faculty in basketball last week, 16-8. The annual affair was as usual an all-school one with the gallery in good voice and the faculty letting down their braids and sporting their schoolgirl gym costumes to add an old fashioned note to the evening's entertainment.

PUBLIC SCHOOL playground girls, and boys as well, are in the midst of learning how to do the English country dances both effectively and authentically. Playground leaders are passing along what they learned at a recent demonstration held by Gene Gowing, representative in America for the English Folk Dancing Society.

Following Mr. Voorhis talk there will be a panel discussion, led by William E. Dodd, jr., son of the former American Ambassador to Germany. Mrs. Shears, Newcomer Here, Heads Democratic Club Fete

The Capital, noted for engulfing newcomers in a whirl of activity, is outdoing itself in the case of Mrs. Curtis Shears, who came to Washington from New York barely four months ago. Not only has she been caught in the customary social round but she has been doing her bit for the Junior League and the Woman's National Democratic Club and now has been named chairman of the latter's spring fete May 22—the biggest event of its season.

She is not ready to reveal plans for the party given annually with Mrs. Roosevelt as guest of honor, except to announce that it will be held this year at the Carlton Hotel, through the courtesy of Frank Swadley, the manager.

Mrs. Shears has not been in Washington long enough to have a record of achievement to her credit here, but her fame elsewhere traveled before her and is responsible for her selection to direct the Democratic Club's fete.

Founded Recreation Center in Greenwich

Ever since becoming a member of the Junior League in Greenwich, Conn., she has been at the forefront of its important organization work. She was founder of its recreation center in Greenwich five years ago which was the first sponsored by a Junior League anywhere in the country to involve an entire recreation center. An abandoned schoolhouse in a district where city authorities had had considerable trouble was taken over for the project. The first step was the establishment of a library for the children, then various other activities were organized, including a garden club of which the children were members. This has grown and become affiliated with federated garden groups. Not only have the young members exhibited their flowers in the large shows, but have come off with many ribbons and prizes. Mrs. Shears was made honorary chairman of the club.

She also served as Junior League chairman of the Greenwich Community Chest several years ago and was chairman of the first Junior League Follies in Greenwich. The success of these resulted in her being named on the advisory board of the Junior League Follies in New York City and chairman of the fashion show committee for the same event.

Began Work Here On Arrival

Holding an inter-league membership in the Washington Junior League, she promptly offered her services when she came here and was assigned as a hostesms at the K street Y. W. C. A. on Tuesday evenings. She has served regularly with her duties at the "Y. W.," think precedence over social affairs on Tuesday nights. She was also invited to be one of the Y. W. C. A. delegates to the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War this season.

Characteristic of her active life is her custom of being up early enough in the morning to see her young son off to St. Albans School and to walk with her husband to his office in the Federal Trade Commission. Before his appointment to the Anti-Trust Department of the Commission, Mr. Shears was assistant United States district attorney in New York City. He is also a graduate of the United States Naval Academy. They are making their home at the Carlton.

Mrs. Shears' first visit to Washington was four years ago, when she came with other Junior League members and students of Todhunter School who had been in Mrs. Roosevelt's class in Government at Todhunter. They were invited to Washington by the First Lady and entertained at the White House several times while they were here.

The session of the council will be the first since Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar took office as federation president last May and will be attended by a number of Washington club women.

"Adjusting Democracy to Human Welfare," the keynote of Mrs. Dunbar's administration, will dominate the program of the council and is reflected in several of the other resolutions to be considered at its sessions.

PHI MU SORORITY, at its founders day celebration a short time ago, observed its custom of collecting pennies for its national scholarship fund. Each alumna and undergraduate member brought pennies for each of the sorority's 87 years of age. The pennies accumulating for more than three-quarters of a century have resulted in a large fund from which loans are made to members who need financial assistance to complete their college courses. In that period, 150 Phi Mus from 43 different chapters have received loans amounting to $27,201.

In Washington, in addition to the alumnae association, Phi Mu has Beta Alpha Chapter at George Washington University and Delta, at American.

THURSDAY Mrs. J. Parker Van Zandt, better known in Washington as Lydia Van Hagen Van Zandt, will address the world fellowship luncheon of the Y. W. C. A. on "What's Happening in China." Guests of honor will be Mme. Zadekis, wife of the Minister of Lithuania, and Mrs. Kwong and Mrs. Tsai, of the Chinese Embassy.

Mrs. Van Zandt has spoken before many club groups this season, telling of her experiences flying around the world. She was Lydia Van Hagen when she started on a motor trip West in June, 1936, and she had no idea of the romance and adventure which were ahead. After a visit on the Pacific coast, she went by boat to Honolulu; from there to Japan, Korea, Manchuria and then to China for two months. On her return, she stopped in the Phillippines and there met Mr. Van Zandt, an aviator to whom she was married in July, 1937. With her husband, she returned to China just at the time of the Japanese invasion.

While she was in Manila, Mrs. Van Zandt organized a world affairs round table for the Y. W. C. A., membership in which increased each week with the arrival of refugees from the war zone. Thursday she will review some of these experiences and will bring the story up to date with a discussion of current developments in the undeclared war in China.

There is more to the trip she and her husband took, however—ten months more of travel by boat between countries and flights over them including India, Egypt, the Holy Land, Italy, from there to London, London to Paris, on to the Scandinavian countries and down through central Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Streett sailed last week for England to attend the Grand National on March 24. Just before leaving America, Streett purchased the farm near Warrenton on the Bethel road known as the Bradley place. This is a good-sized farm with an old stone house, built on a hillside with a beautiful sloping lawn leading down to the road. The place was owned for a number of years by the late Nelson Fell, jr. Streett bought it from the former Mrs. Fell, who is now Mrs. Francoele, of New York.

The friends of Bill and Lettice Streett are delighted that they have acquired this attractive place and know what a lovely home they will make of it.

There are many visitors here for the week-end who came to see the running of the Warrenton Hunts, point-to-point races yesterday, celebrating the ending of the fox hunting season. Amory S. Carhart, M. F. H., is well pleased at the season they have had. Foxes have been plentiful, it was an open season and the sport has been of the very best.

Throng Visits Newly Opened Middleburg Health Center, Donated by Paul Mellons

THE MIDDLEBURG HEALTH CENTER opened officially on Wednesday morning. Many came to see this beautiful equipped building which Mr. Paul Mellon gave as a health center to Middleburg and which Mrs. Mellon spent so much time and thought decorating, and helping Mrs. Lea McDonald with the equipment.

Miss Charlotte H. Noland, who is chairman of the Health Center, has supervised the remodeling of the building. Trustees are Miss Noland, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Sands, Mrs. Henry Fairfax, Mrs. Oliver Iselin and Dr. H. A. Spitler. On the executive board are Mrs. T. Walter Fred, Mrs. Robert McConnell, Mrs. D. T. Saffer, Mrs. Jack T. Skinner and Mrs. Lea McDonald.

Dr. D. T. Saffer is in charge with Mrs. Preston Gray as resident nurse and Mrs. Alice di Zerega Moore assistant to Mrs. McDonald.

AMONG THE VISITORS seen at the Health Center on Wednesday were Dr. John Gibson, of Leesburg, who motored over just to see it; Rev. and Mrs. Campbell Mayers. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Sands, a number of young ladies from Foxcroft School, members of the Lions Club, The Town Council in a body, members of the fire department, all the merchants and business men in town. In fact all day long people were coming and going, showing much interest in this new venture.

Mr. Paul Mellon heard of the idea, thought it a good one and most generously bought the old brick house, home of the late J. Walter Cochran, for this purpose. We who knew Mr. Cochran know how pleased he would be to see his old home turned over for this good work. Mrs. Fred should be pleased to see her dream come true, and we who listened to her ideas and plans with only one ear, at first, are delighted, for now we understand what excellent work can be done and the things that can be accomplished in this modern, up-to-date little hospital, and what a blessing it is going to be to the community, and we owe a vote of thinks to Mr. Mellon.

MR. AND MRS. Courtland H. Smith and their two sons, Francis Smith and Reginald Smith, have moved into their new home in Middleburg, from their farm Burnleigh, near The Plains, which they recently sold to Mrs. Eva Stewart Spilman. The Smiths' new home, fomerly the Pearson home, has been added to and remodeled. Everyone is welcoming the "Courtie" Smiths, for they will be a great addition to our town.

Miss Nancy Iselin entertained at a dinner party and kitchen shower on Thursday night, in honor of Miss Jane Stevenson, of Middleburg, and Mr. Robert McIlvaine, of Washington, whose engagement was announced recently. Numerous and fascinating were the gifts the young couple received. Among those there were Miss Mary Dougherty, of Berryville; Miss Eleanor Flood, of Washington; Miss Fanny Nelson Lyon and Miss Mary Owen Lyon, of Purcellville; Miss Bettina Belmont, Miss Barbara Iselin, Miss Mildred McConnell, Dulany Randolph, Sandy McLeod, Henry Frost, Aldrich Dudley, jr., Roland Mitchell, Buddy Ward, Mike Kerr and Stephen Clark.

Your Shopping Reporter

If yours were a commercial job as a purchasing agent, how long would you hold it? There is more to this, my cherrubs, than merely knowing how to use a wet thumb to test table linen, and a pressing thumb to test cantaloupe. It means buying the right things with your "husband's" income. The right things include his day-to-day peace of mind, and your own sense of comfort. It is futile for you to hoard string and use refrigerator left-overs if your rent is too high . . . by this I mean you must be consistent in your endeavor to be thrifty. Correct purchases—that is, getting the "mostest for the leastest"—is the aim of every right-minded woman, no matter how unlimited her income might be. I believe that the shops I run in this column make an effort to do "just that" and if you'll use "this sheet" as an index when you venture forth on a shopping tour I think you'll find it a valuable aid in "distributing your wealth" wisely.

New Housecoats and Frocks in Vivid Colors Preserve That 'Little-Girl' Appearance

Pinch a pinny from your pin money and add a new outfit to your summer wardrobe. It can be done. For the advanced collection of cotton housecoats and frocks are inexpensive but ultra smart as shown by the sketches below. Bold in design, vivid and gay in colors, they are in perfect harmony with fashion's demands for floral prints and bright stripes. Made of crisp, washable fabrics, they preserve the much sought-after, "little-girl" appearance. Stripes and checks are often combined with solid colors for contrast. Many of the dresses and housecoats alternate between the severely tailored and the soft, primly feminine types. Skirts are flared and in some instances extravagantly wide, even in the wrap-around styles. Both square necks and shawl collars prevail. Materials include sheer seersucker, chambray, rayon and other practical yet distinctive fabrics.

Drawings by E. C. Goulard

PENNIES frequently filched from the cereal box add up to the homespun, rayon housecoat (above) in contrasting colors of chartreuse, raspberry and royal blue. Saved from the salt box change—the smart green chambray dress (at center) has a tailored, checked bodice and a solid-colored, flared skirt.

PURLOINED from the pepper account—the floral printed cotton princess frock (above) has a slide fastener closing and pert bow trimmings. From the lemon jar comes the twangy dirndl housecoat above, made of floral striped, spun rayon fabric, with a fitted basque waist and short puffed sleeves.

Perfumes To Match Dress, Mood

Orchid for Bride, Tweed for Outdoor Girl Among Spring Decrees

By Carolyn Abbott.

PERFUME AND fashion have been playing around together for a long time. But this spring they are definitely wedded to each other. So inseparable have the two become that they complement each other's moods. There are delicate flower odors extracted from real flowers to accent the very feminine little girl or demure lady-like fashions. And there are musk and sandalwood frgarances to add mystery to the exotic costumes. Warm, vivid, tantalizing, Romany scents give dash and color to the new gypsy frocks.

In keeping with the new gypsy styles that radiate color, warmth, gayety and abandonment one perfumer has brought forth Tzigane. It has all the brilliant overtones combined with undertones of wistfulness and sadness. This same perfumer also created three new floral scents, honeysuckle, sweet pea and gardenia, to keep pace with girlish, feminine frocks of the lavendar and old lace type.

Bottled Orchids

Even the ephemeral and evanescent orchid fragrance has been bottled by a well known cosmetic manufacturer to harmonize with her orchid make-up and purple and fuchsia costumes. This perfume is one to wear with rich jewels, filmy, floating evening gowns or any of the romantic styles.

For the bride and her bridesmaids who choose orchid, periwinkle blue gowns there is a new Orchidee Bleue perfume to give the final essence of provocativeness and innocence to the ethereal moods and frocks.

Many of the new perfumes combine the fragrance of several flowers with one or two odors predominating. For example, the Cyclamen de Raymond perfume is made of a variety of flower odors, with hyacinth, violet and rose predominating.

Personality as well as fashions should be considered in the selection of perfume.

Tweed for Outdoors

The outdoor girl who lives in country tweed and dotes on sports should choose a fresh, invigorating scent such as a tweed or any of the other perfumes suggestive of the sturdy, outdoor atmosphere.

Sophisticated types who want to suggest mystery or daring would do well to choose a perfume with those overtones. Some of the perfumes of this variety are "My Sin," "Shocking," "Toujours Moi" and "sousdent."

Ideal for the girl who likes to appear grown up but who just can't be sophisticated is a pleasant flower, light odor with a little of the subtle undertone.

The best way to determine your own perfume personality is to experiment with a number of different odors to find their reaction on you in regard to fragrance, mood or fashion ideas. Perfume should make you more poised and give you the inner sense of good grooming. Whenever you discover a scent that makes you feel self-assured make it a part of your individuality and personality. Women are often remembered by the perfume that they use, for it creates for them a definite personality.

No perfume should be applied on the clothes. It should be applied directly to the skin or hair. Focal points of the body that should be given a dash of perfume include the elbows, ears and throat. Applied to the skin the odors cling much longer than when put on wearing apparel.

Noodle Family Featured in Recipe Contest

There will be plenty of culinary license in the new Post recipe contest. Any type of noodle, macaroni or spaghetti dish will be eligible. In other words, all, or only one, of the noodle family foods may be entered for one of five cash prizes. First award is $3, second $2, and there are three additional prizes of $1 each.

Several requests have come to the food editor for novel and appetizing ways of preparing noodles or macaroni as a substitute for meats during Lent. Mrs. Barbara Lipscomb, 20 H street northeast, has personally asked that this cereal food be made the contest theme as an aid to her in preparing zestful inexpensive meals. In reply to these requests, not only will your entries, possibly, net you one of those cash prizes, but your original ideas may help many local homemakers in pepping up cereal foods.

Macaroni and mushrooms au gratin may be your contribution to this contest. Macaroni or noodles stuffed in green peppers has verve, as has a spaghetti and tomato ring, or vermicelli salad or spaghetti Milanaise. Enter one of these kitchen-tested formulas or whatever cereal grain dish appeals to you most. Mail all carefully written recipes to Alice Clayton, The Post Food Editor, before March 25.

Today's Health Talk

Program Advised For Treatment of Athlete's Foot

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

It is a generally recognized principle of treatment that when there are 10 or 15 strongly recommended treatments for a disease, that is almost positive proof that none of them is really any good.

There is probably no ill to which flesh is heir which has had so many remedies suggested for it as the condition known as athlete's foot. This itchy, blistery eruption, which occurs upon the feet of those both with and without physical prowess, is sometimes very easy to get rid of and sometimes very resistant to treatment. When one of your friends has cured himself in a day or two, he naturally feels that the treatment he has used will work for anyone, any time, and goes around touting it to all others afflicted. Sometimes it works and sometimes it doesn't.

List Is Long

Thus, the list of remedies used on this pesky thing is long; it includes iodine, mercurochrome, salicylic acid, gasoline, ammoniated mercury, formaldehyde, X-rays and other rays, and a few dozen other things.

The fact seems to be that the fungus which causes it has many varieties, and what kills one variety does not do anything to the other. For that reason a comprehensive program, such as is issued by Dr. J. A. Meledy, of the Veterans Administration at Boston, is worth repeating.

The first point to be stressed is absolute cleanliness. The feet should be entirely free from perspiration and extremely clean at all times. Soap and water should never be used, however; instead, warm olive oil is used to clean the feet. The patient should own ten pairs of cheap white, cotton socks and three pairs of shoes so that one pair can be worn for one day only.

The patient's feet are soaked for 20 minutes in a solution containing two tablespoonfuls of sodium hyposulphite in two quarts of water.

Exposed to Rays

The feet are then thoroughly dried and exposed to the actinic rays for a period of 5 to 7 minutes at a distance of about 18 inches. While the feet are thus exposed, the toes are separated so that the rays can penetrate thoroughly into the spaces between and under them. After exposure to the actinic rays, the feet are thoroughly dusted with Epto powder and the patient instructed to put on clean socks.

Epto powder is a carefully compounded semi-anhydrous dusting powder of desiccated sodium thiosulphate, enhanced by the synergistic action of thymol and an acceptable base of starch and boracic acid, with oil of absinthium as a deodorant.

This is similar to the powder which we recommended a month or two ago, which consists of salicylic acid five grams, menthol two grams, camphor eight grams, boric acid 50 grams and starch 35 grams.

Perfume Accent for Elbows

A DASH of perfume on the elbow adds a whiff of glamour and interest to what might be merely more projecting bones. This little personal beauty device is practiced daily by Shirley Ross, Hollywood actress, shown above.

Nifty Night Clubs Make Bid for Sunday Nighters

New York, March 19.

TIME WAS in this town when most of the citizens spent an improving Sunday evening around the radio set or toddled out to a snappy lecture on "Through Fifty-second Street With Gun and Camera." But that was before the operators of our niftier night clubs thought up the various contests which now enliven the Sabbath eves of our village. Affairs have now reached a state where a customer can't go into one of the better night spots on Sunday evening without seeing a bunch of pretty girls running for something.

ALICE HUGHES

Uncle Sherman Billingsley has been running singing contests at his dear old Stork clubbey. At El Morocco last Sunday the customers were asked to vote for the best-dressed woman in the place, the title going to Gladys Swarthout, the singer, whose rewards included a lot of genteel applause and $100 in credit for future groceries. The Swarthout get-up was a black dress of shirred chiffon, worn with a very wide white belt and a white hat.

New York was greatly cheered to learn that Gladys will not starve to death while the $100 holds out, just as it was pleased a few weeks ago when Mr. Winthrop Rockefeller (of the Rockefellers) took down the same award for being half of the best-looking couple on that floor.

Other high-class saloon-keepers, maddened by the contest notion for those slack Sunday nights, keep holding out such bait as movie tests, script-reading bouts and mass struggles for toy balloons which carry prizes. Naturally, this insanity is much too much for us old folks. Let the youngsters have their mad flings. Hall and I shall stay right at the loud-speaker, dialing to some cultural quiz or the refined patter of Master McCarthy!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Thousands of our citizens have been flocking to Fiftieth street and Fifth avenue, the heart of Rockefeller Center, to see the trees! By special permission of the city fathers, Mr. Rockefeller has actually been allowed to plant eight 50-foot elm trees in the very middle of our swankiest shopping district. I can just imagine tiny tots being led over from the congested tenement areas along the East River, looking up at the giants of the forest with popping eyes, and piping "Ma, what in the double-dash is that blank thing?" . . .

Age means nothing to a real trouper of the old school, and

Age Means Nothing To Real Trouper Of Old School

Elsie Janis has proved it by being the sensation of Frank Fay's revival of vaudeville here. Elsie topped her famous impersonations with her series of beautiful and graceful dance-steps and cartwheels—and little Elsie, still one of the great glories of Columbus, Ohio, is nudging 50. What a woman!

Dorothy Mackaill, the blonde girl who is still as lovely as she was in her film-starring days, caused eyes to pop in one of our night clubs when she stepped in wearing a costume consisting of a heavily ribbed violet sweater and a fuchsia skirt split to the knee in front. Dorothy got plenty of attention, and practically all of it was complimentary.

Now that Zorina has gone on tour with "I Married An Angel," another ballerina named Toumanova, also appearing in a musical comedy, has become one of the town's foremost belles. I saw her dining at the Casino Russe wearing a beautiful dinner gown of chartreuse chiffon—and she'll certainly fill in for La Zorina!

This column appears daily and Sunday.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl, 17, Adores Boy, 23, Who Admits Loving Her; Should She Give Up All Other Beaux?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 17, and for three years I have been enjoying the company of several boys, never showing favoritism. I am considered attractive, and I am popular enough to have my calendar well filled always. I have taken genuine pleasure in going out with everyone, instead of wearing some one boy's fraternity pin and devoting all my time to him—as many of my girl friends are doing. But this was because I had never met anyone I was so fond of that I would be willing to sacrifice my gay social life in order to be with him.

Now, I've met a boy of whom I am particularly fond. To me, he is ideal—and I've known many boys and am sensible enough to know when the feeling is real and when it's merely "puppy love." He admits his love for me and I would do anything for him. I know he resents my dating the other boys, although he has never complained. After all, when a boy is crazy about a girl and she admits the mutuality of the feeling, he would naturally resent her going out with other boys, wouldn't he?

For exactly two months now, I've all but adored this boy. Without him, I can find no interest in anything. I want to keep him. Should I stop leading this gay life and devote my time to him? I know I'm young—too young even to consider marriage—but as he is quite a bit older than I, and two years graduated from college, he is serious and ready to settle down. He's 23 and has a promising future, a good job and plenty of money. And I know he loves me. I emphasize this, Miss Haworth, because I am so sure of it.

Would it be a mistake for me to devote all my time to him? I have two more years of college ahead of me and I have always had a good time. But if I continue as I am and have been, I'm afraid he will forget how much I love him—and leave me. Please enlighten me. I'll be waiting eagerly for your reply.

No—For Three Reasons

DEAR M. R.: There is a touching naivete about your line of reasoning. You admit that you "want to keep" this boy and that you are afraid he may forget how much you love him and therefore leave you, unless you devote all your time to him. Well, here's the truth of the matter: it isn't half so important for the boy to be constantly reminded of how much you love him, as it is for him to be kept constantly aware of how much he loves you—if you would have him continue paying court. So that's sound reason No. 1 for keeping your social calendar reasonably full of dates with other boys.

Sound reason No. 2 is this: He hasn't asked you to tie yourself down to him, so you would be throwing yourself at his head, more or less, in voluntarily placing all your time at his disposal. If you want a third reason, you have it in the very intensity of that mutual feeling, which must of necessity be sublimated rather than expressed. Since marriage is out of the question, because of your youth and unfinished education, the best way to keep your head in this romance, is to treat the relationship as a very special interest in your list of many social interests; but to refrain, most definitely, from making it your one and only interest.

M. H.

Personality Problem

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am in my early thirties, am attractive and everyone thinks I have a nice personality, but I am very shy and timid. You can't imagine how I suffer. I had thought that I would overcome this handicap as I grew older, and I think I have, to a certain extent, but I do not feel satisfied to go through life standing in the background. I have never wanted to be prominent. I have wanted only to live a well-rounded and satisfying life.

When I meet someone of the opposite sex who is attracted to me, or I to him, I feel so very shy that I am really ashamed. This same timidity shows up in my work. I am very dependable and willing but sometimes I am backward about showing my capabilities. I belong to several clubs, but I do not take the active part which I feel I should. I would greatly appreciate any advice you can give me. BEWILDERED.

Rich Source of Help

DEAR BEWILDERED: About a year ago there appeared, on the news stands, and simultaneously—out of a clear sky—on my desk, a magazine entitled "Your Life," that has since proved (in my opinion) to be a veritable gold mine of information on the moot subject of personality development. Someone has been kind enough to place my name on the subscription list of this publication, and it affords me great pleasure to be able to say, here and now, what an exceptionally fine periodical it is.

Of recent months, the magazine appears to have increased its stature, both as to quantity and quality of content, and within its covers one finds an endless variety of interesting articles, authored by specialists in many fields of human behavior, giving specific suggestions for diagnosing and correcting personality defects. Off hand, I recall articles by Drs. Paul Popenoe, Donald S. Laird, Louis E. Bisch; by Margery Wilson and Sara Strayer; condensations of helpful books; charts for assessing one's shortcomings and strong points, accompanied by recommendations for strengthing the former and exercising the latter; wise and witty discourses on men-and-women relationships; on family relationships; on the art of entertaining and being entertained, etc., etc.

I am convinced that anyone suffering from a wretched sense of social inadequacy, rooted either in shyness or in ignorance of acceptable social techniyues, could not possibly seize upon a more prolific source of potential self-help than is provided by this periodical. I suggest that you get acquainted with this magazine. I am sure you would be doing yourself a real favor in making it a "must" item on your reading list hereafter, and that it would be well worth your while to run through the copies that have been issued the past year. No doubt you can find them on file either at the public library or the Library of Congress. M. H.

Display Home Opens Today In Maryland

Bradley Hills Grove Site Contains Acre

A new Washington Post display home opening today meets effectively a definite trend in today's residential market, a trend indicating home buyers are considering more than a single advantage in making this important decision. Greater independence and proper shelter are but two of several benefits prompting their action. Application of funds toward home ownership which might otherwise be expended in rent, is another inducement, but chief among numerous reasons for the home buying revival is increasing value of wisely selected property as an investment

There are several factors which must not be forgotten in acquiring a home for the last named purpose. Of great importance among these is its location, not only with regard to beauty of site, but desirability of environment

Aware of this, many buyers are selecting carefully planned and restricted communities which will promote the worth of their purchase, where they will be assured of space, natural beauty, congenial atmosphere and neighboring dwellings of attractive design, matching the carefully chosen architecture of their own.

Bradley Hills Grove

A development providing these requirements is introduced through today's Post Display Home. Called Bradley Hills Grove, this Maryland community, close to Washington, is noted for its broad, tree-shaded lawns and gentle elevations offering distinctive sites for its homes and permitting delightful views of the countryside.

For the planning of this section, R. Bates Warren, an experienced builder of some of the most distinguished residences in the District and its metropolitan area, set apart a 350-acre of wooded land for this subdivision. Realizing that wide lots enhance artistically constructed houses, he has insured these by legal regulations preventing for many years sale of building sites of less than half an acre within the boundaries of the project.

Of stone and brick construction, the exhibit residence is two and one-half stories in height. On the first floor are entrance hall, large living room with wide screened living porch adjoining gumwood paneled library, with fireplace and lavatory, bright dining room with bay window, kitchen containing many built-in cabinets, refrigerator and Hot-Point range and butler's pantry.

Second story has an exceptionally large master bedroom with adjacent sitting room and private bath, a boy's room, notable for its built-in bunks with recessed bookcases and bed lights, and two additional bedrooms and bath. The third floor is completely finished as a game room and the basement has an unusually large recreation room, paneled in cypress, and having built-in bar and storage cabinet. A very well finished maid's room and bath complete the substructure where American Radiator Co. "Sun Beam" air-conditioning plant is also located.

Abundant Closet Space

The residence is remarkable for its closet space, there being four in the basement, ten on the second, including a large cedar, and two on the first floors. The site of the house contains more than an acre of ground with an outdoor fireplace. The garage is of two-car capacity with overhead doors. Many of the rooms are full or half paneled.

Location of this presentation dwelling is one where large lawns and handsome homes provide continuous vistas of natural charm and where the bordering parkways have been dedicated to preserve numerous brooks and small streams traversing the forested land. It is a subdivision where the main approach to the property, Bradley boulevard, is planned 100 feet wide as a smart two-way thoroughfare, with central parking, in its course to Wisconsin avenue northwest.

In laying out the tract Mr. Warren considered desires of those who love the country life and a closeness

The Week in Real Estate

Twelve teams engaged in a membership campaign of Washington Building Congress have increased the roster of that organization from 175 to nearly 300 and the end of the effort is still six days away. Reports last week indicated the team headed by H. A. Johns, local manager of F. W. Dodge Corporation, had a slight lead over that captained by J. R. Skinker, of Skinker & Garrett, builders. Prizes will be awarded the winning team and three leading campaigners at the second annual dinner of the congress at Mayflower Hotel, March 30.

JOHNS

Membership team captains are: Arthur B. Heaton, architect; A. W. Lee, plastering contractor; Joe H. Hill, Truscon Steel Co.; Harold H. Marsh, chief structural engineer, municipal architect's office; Mr. Skinker, John W. Hardell, Hugh Reilly Co.; William M. Jones, Cleveland Quarries Co.; Frank Davis, builder; Mr. Johns, W. H. A. S. Gardiner, sr., heading his own office and construction company, is on a Bermudan cruise.

A second meeting last Tuesday in a series of sales conferences held in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building by the committee on education, Washington Real Estate Board, was well attended, the speaker being Edward R. Carr, realtor - builder and developer of Barnaby Woods and Rutledge. Having for his topic, "Showing Today's Homes," Mr. Carr emphasized importance of thorough knowledge of the house, its construction, proximity to churches, schools and utilities, and elevation in relation to sea level. He said salesmen of new or old homes must be conversant with neighborhood trends which are subject to constant change and that more than a

Southeast Has Twelve New Homes

A spirited revival in residential construction is manifested in all parts of the city and the southeast section is an outstanding example of a home building upsurge marking the new year. Among numerous recent developments in this area is one of 12 semi-detached homes in the Mount Dome neighborhood.

Its location is one of the finest close-in sites and the elevation offers a fine view over Washington, with schools, stores and transportation conveniently at hand. The homes are of brick construction and have three exposures. Each contains five large rooms, tiled bath, full basement and automatic air-conditioned heat.

Insulated, furred, weatherstripped and caulked, all are built on deep, wooded lots. Built by Colonial Construction Co., Inc., they are situated in the 3400 block of Carpenter street southeast. Shown by Randle & Garvin, Inc., they may be seen by going out Pennsylvania avenue southeast to Thirty-third street and turning left on Carpenter street.

Greyhound Terminal Plans New Building

Greyhound Terminal of Washington, Inc., applied last week for a permit to erect a three-story and basement bus terminal at 1110 New York avenue northwest. Estimated cost of the building, to be of stone over reinforced concrete, is $275,000. The structure, 175 feet wide and approximately 100 feet deep, is designed by Wischmayer, Arrasmith & Elswick, architects, of Louisville, Ky.

Kenwood Trees To Blossom About April 1

Thousands of Visitors Expected to See Vernal Spectacle

Famed Japanese cherry trees of Kenwood, Md., are expected to be in full bloom by April 1, Donal L. Chamberlin, of the Kennedy-Chamberlin Development Co., planners of this exclusive residential community, announced yesterday. Each year when these trees are blossoming Kenwood is visited by thousands of Washingtonians.

The fame of its trees has spread throughout the Nation and tourists from distant States are now including Kenwood in their spring travel itineraries. It is said to be the only community in the United States which has such an annual spectacle. Every street in Kenwood is lined with yoshino cherry trees, there being nearly 2,000 of them, and most of them ten years old.

Both developers and residents of Kenwood enjoy the pleasure visitors express at seeing the trees, and Mr. Chamberlin asks visitors this year to bring invalids by motor to see them.

"If you know of such person or persons," his statement reads, "won't you bring them out to Kenwood while the trees are in bloom? The sight of these millions of delicate white blooms, with stately homes rising in the background, will leave an ineffaceable memory of beauty that will be cherished during long, tedious days of convalescence."

Rules for Kenwood's third annual cherry blossom photographic contest were also announced, this competition being made broad in scope and easy to enter for the benefit of amateur photographers who are able to make good pictures of the blossoms with any size camera. The following prizes will be awarded: First, $50; second, $25; third, $15; fourth, $10; fifth, $5, and ten "honorable mention prizes" of $2.50 each.

Winners of first, second and third prizes may elect to receive silver trophies instead of cash if they so desire. Any and all amateur photographers in Washington and vicinity are eligible to enter the contest. Contestants are not to write their names or addresses on any entry, but are to attach to the picture or inclose in an envelope name, address and telephone number.

Judges of this contest will be Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, J. D. Sears, president of the Kenwood Citizens Association; J. A. Overholt, president of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce; B. A. Hewins, manager of Eastman Kodak Stores, Inc., of Washington, and Earl Heap, picture editor of the Washington Star.

Entrants must agree to abide by rules and accept opinion of the judges as final. If there are tie entries for any prize, duplicate prizes will be awarded. Contestants may enter not more than five pictures, all of which must have been taken in Kenwood during the spring of 1939. All entries must be dull finish, 8 by 10 inches, mounted on white cardboard with 1-inch margin on all sides, finished photograph to be 10 by 12 inches.

Entries must be mailed or delivered to the field office, Kennedy-Chamberlin Development Co., 50 Kennedy drive, Kenwood, Chevy Chase, Md. Notice of the close of the contest will be announced in Washington papers two days before closing. It is understood that no entries will be returned to contestants, but any entry (except the prize and honorable mention winners) may be called for at the field office after the judging has been completed and winners announced. All entries not called for in 30 days become the property of the development company. It is also understood that prints and negatives of winning pictures will become the property of the company and may be used in any way that it sees fit.

On the day after the contest closes pictures will be judged at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club and notice of the winners will be published in Washington papers. Entries will be judged solely on Kenwood home picture interest and must contain a house or part of a house. Pictures made with a small camera will have just as much chance to win as those made with expensive equipment. No information either by phone or in writing will be given out in connection with the contest by the company other than copies of the rules, which may be secured by either writing to the company at the above address or by telephoning.

Mortgage Loans Boosted On Farms

Insurance Data For 1938 Shows Decline Is Ended

More emphasis is being placed by life insurance companies on the making of farm mortgage loans than for more than a decade, the Federal Home Loan Bank Review reports. The Review published a survey of investments of all kinds by life insurance companies showing that, after a long period of uncertainty in farm financing, their farm mortgage portfolios have leveled off their downward trend in volume.

The survey was based upon information obtained from about 80 insurance companies having more than 90 per cent of the assets of all such companies in the United States.

Loans Total $111,853,000

Farm mortgage loans made by all insurance companies in 1938 totaled $111,853,000, which was 3.1 per cent of estimated new investments of these companies. The amount in 1937 was $90,430,000, while in 1934 it was $32,574,000. At the end of 1938, all life insurance companies held farm mortgages aggregating $869,000,000, or 4.2 per cent of the total of all investments held by the companies.

Mortgages held by the companies on city and town property on December 31, 1938, totaled $4,500,000,000, with $830,146,000 being added during the year 1938. This 1938 figure was a slight increase over 1937 when the total was $622,244,000. In both 1938 and 1937 the nonfarm mortgage loans made were equal to about 17.8 per cent of the total estimated new investments in those years.

Investments Increase

New investments of all kinds by life insurance companies in 1938 were estimated at slightly over $3,500,000,000, which was about $54,000,000 over the 1937 placement of funds. The total investments held on December 31, 1938, aggregated about $20,936,000,000, of which 23.6 per cent or $4,944,000,000 were in United States Government bonds.

The estimated total of real estate held at the end of 1938 was placed at $2,150,000,000. This was taken as further evidence of the considerable improvement in the mortgage foreclosure situation.

6 Dwellings Planned

Reliable Construction Co. will build six two-story brick dwellings at 1600-1612 Fort Davis street southeast, costing $24,000, from designs of J. P. Fitzsimmons.

To Build 16 Dwellings

Sixteen more two-story brick dwellings are scheduled for erection in the Southeast section project of Meadowbrook, Inc. They will be located at 1954-1964 T street southeast, and 1939-1965 S street southeast. Estimated cost of the work is $70,000. Harvey P. Baxter is the architect.

Buildingmen Evolve Plan to Sell Homes

Guild Dealers To Merchandise Stock Houses

Atlantic City.—Three hundred building material dealers and salesmen have been going to "school" here and the result may be the adoption of a new method of building and buying moderate and low-cost homes in northeastern States.

Such is the view of A. A. Hood, founder and director of the Johns-Manville sponsored National Housing Guild and "dean" of the school which the guild has conducted at the Hotel Traymore. One of the nation's leading authorities on building, Hood has been the director of the guild since it was started four years ago, when it became apparent to J.-M.'s president, Lewis H. Brown, that the building industry must learn to merchandise its product.

To train dealers how to do this—to sell "homes" and not merely the products and materials which go into a home—the guild has sponsored clinics and schools throughout the country. The school is the fifth held so far this year, and somewhere among the building material dealers attending it was the 5,000th member of the building industry to "graduate" with a guild diploma.

Guild-trained dealers in the last four years have established hundreds of local housing guilds throughout the nation in accordance with the business and merchandising techniques taught at the schools. Purpose of the local guilds is to provide "customer's headquarters" for every kind of residential and commercial building, and to serve all members of the local building industry as well as the consumer by correlating and co-ordinating the work involved in the construction of a home or other type building.

Under the guild system, the consumer receives for almost the first time in United States building history a "one-stop" service where he can actually "shop" for tailor-made homes and remodeling. This system is in contrast to an old system under which a person wishing to build or remodel sometimes had to get in touch with as many as 20 different individuals in order to arrange for work.

Main feature of the Housing Guild program this year will be the promotion of Guildway houses, designed by nationally-known architects and whose basic plans are soon to be available through every guild dealer throughout the United States. These homes are being advertised nationally—which in effect puts a "trade-marked" home on a local dealer's shelf for the first time.

Priced to suit the moderate pocketbook and planned for economical, speedy, and high quality construction, the Guildway homes will be aggressively merchandised as examples of which the home buyer can secure in today's market. Needing only adaption to local needs, the homes can be built anywhere in the United States, and will provide along with charm, comfort and long and trouble-free life, a guarantee of highest quality construction. To make this guarantee possible, Johns-Manville engineers have developed a set of standard form specifications after consultation with Federal Housing Administration officials.

Besides the school here two others are scheduled this year, one at Niagara Falls, Ontario, and the other at Atlanta. Schools earlier this year were held at Dallas, Cleveland, Oakland and Chicago. At each of these, attendance broke previous records.

Savings-Loan Officers Assume Their Posts

New officers of the American Savings and Loan Institute have taken charge, after being chosen at the midwinter conference in Indianapolis are, president, A. J. Bromfield, Denver, Colo.; first vice president, H. N. Faulkner, Boston, Mass.; second vice president, L. H. Allen, Houston, Tex.

The institute is the national educational and research organization of the $6,000,000,000 thrift and home financing business and is now conducting training schools for savings and loan association executives and staff workers in some 70 cities. All of the new officers hold the standard diploma of the institute, representing three years of concentrated study of the technicalities and policies of savings and mortgage finance.

to nature. To realize these, he subdivided it into large home lots permitting gardening and sports. Most of the houses already constructed in this territory have surroundings of an acre and upwards. Numerous lots have ample room for stables and riding over the winding paths is one of the pastimes.

Fertility of the soil assists flower and fruit gardening. Wide grounds lend their expanse to pleasing landscaping with shrubs and hedgerows, and there is still yard space in many of the larger residential plots for tennis courts and swimming pools. Rock gardens, terraces and open-air ovens for picnics are other attractions which add to the joy of living in this rustic community so conveniently near commercial and transportation service.

Space can be apportioned for fruit trees and vegetable gardens. In fact, there is room for the individual enjoyment of every member of the family, from sand piles, swings and slides for the little ones to cool, shaded arbors of rest for the elderly. To visit the display home and Bradley Hills Grove, drive west on Bradley boulevard from Wisconsin avenue, a distance of 3½ miles. The home is furnished by Hilda Miller; rugs are by Hintlian and millwork by Eisinger Mill & Lumber Co.

Mortgage Data Given by FHLB

Savings and loan associations accounted for 30 per cent of the number and 27 per cent of the amount of all mortgages of not more than $20,000 recorded in cities and towns throughout the United States in January, it is reported by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Nationally, these associations recorded more mortgages than any other class of lender.

Mortgages recorded on nonfarm property numbered 90,555 and were valued at $244,015,000, the officials stated. The estimate was based upon reports from counties in 44 States and the District.

Lumber Dealers Will Meet Here

Annual convention of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, representing 23,000 lumber and building material dealers, will be held here May 8 through 10, it is announced by Don A. Campbell, Lebanon, Ky., president of the association. Convention headquarters will be in the Raleigh Hotel.

Representative delegations from each of the 28 regional and State associations affiliated with the national group will attend the conference, at which they will hear talks by prominent housing officials, Government leaders and members of Congress.

The program for the convention is announced by Mr. Campbell as follows: May 8—Registration, secretaries, conference, executive committee meeting. May 9—Breakfast meeting, board of directors; joint meeting, executive committee and secretaries; committee reports. May 10—General sessions, election of officers, adjournment.

Ceiling Tints Accent Space

Long a valued device of interior decorators, the use of wall and ceiling tints to conceal bad proportions and accent the feeling of space is now being commonly used by home owners.

Light colors, those mixed with white, tend to create a feeling of space and should be used as groundwork when this effect is sought. By using a gray background throughout the house, brightened with light shades of yellow, pale green, coral, or other similar tints, a sense of space will be attained, and normally dark rooms will appear brighter. If the house is too large and appears too empty, the action should be reversed. Dark shades, warm glowing colors, should be used to draw together an oversized room.

Where too much sunlight streams into a room, the intensity should be tempered with green or shades of blue.

Display Home In Dumbarton Wins Praise

Shield of Merit House Overlooks Potomac Valley

In the National Capital, with thousands of Federal employes from every State of the Union, there is obviously a cross-section of opinion representative of every part of the country. That the expressions from the many visitors to the Good Housekeeping Home, in Dumbarton, should be so unstinted in praise of the exterior and interior design, and the early American furnishings, is proof of the enduring quality of the stately Georgian style.

This home, at 4624 Reservoir road, in the new development of Waverly Taylor, Inc., is one of a group of six recently awarded the Good Housekeeping "Shield of Merit." This award is a part of the magazine's program for better standards in building and is a public recognition of quality in location, planning, design, materials, construction and land usage.

Situated high above the river, with a superb view down the valley of the Potomac, Dumbarton is fortunately located within less than 15 minutes' driving time to downtown, and at the same time possesses all the advantages of surrounding parks and estates, convenience to schools, stores, churches and both bus and street car transportation.

Generous Lots

After the shield was awarded, Miss Kouse, director of the Good Housekeeping Studio of Architecture, Building and Furnishing, selected one of the homes to decorate and furnish. Her interesting article, illustrated with interior and exterior views, appears in the March issue of the magazine under three successive titles, "This is the Way to Choose a House," "These Are the Details to Look For," and "This Is the Way to Plan Your Colors."

Approaching the homes, one notices the generous lot widths and the groupings in pairs to have the service sides of adjacent houses together, avoiding a view from the living quarters of one house toward the kitchen of another. Along the fronts is a low, stone wall just in back of the sidewalk, surmounted by a gracefully curving terrace.

Walks are of Pennsylvania flagstone, and the materials of the houses generally brick, some handmade, sand finish, some painted white and some reclaimed. The roofs are of blue-black Buckingham slate and all exterior metal or copper. Aluminum screens have been used on exterior doors, windows and porches to prevent the staining of white woodwork.

Upon entering the Good Housekeeping Home, there is first a center entrance hall, leading to the living room and dining room, both overlooking the rear garden. To the left of the hall is a small study, paneled in knotty pine, a powder room and coat closet. At the right is a passageway leading to the basement and the kitchen.

Keynote of the entire first floor is the fine detail, characteristic of the Adam period, seen in the cornices, the moulded bands on the ceilings of the living and dining rooms, the window cornices, trim and fireplace mantel. Furnishings, drapes, pictures and ornaments are all consistent with this period.

In the kitchen one finds a perfect combination of efficient and convenient equipment with colorful and pleasing decoration. The 6-cubic-foot frigidaire, 84-inch sink, modern gas range with all types of controls, efficient lighting and numerous storage cabinets give promise of easy housekeeping.

On the second floor, there are three large bedrooms, the two principal rooms overlooking the gardens, two modernly equipped bathrooms and five closets. Stair leads to a storage attic. This home is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Drive out Q street northwest through Georgetown to Wisconsin avenue, north one block and left on Reservoir road to Dumbarton, just west of Foxhall road.

New England Cottage Wins Fair Visitors

2-Bedroom Home on Treasure Island Draws Throngs

One of the most interesting exhibits at the Golden Gate International Exposition is a small, white two-bedroom cottage that contrasts sharply with the towering structures of modern and futuristic design on Treasure Island.

Despite the competition, the little blue-shuttered cottage with its simple Colonial flavor seems to be holding a dominant position in the preferences of fair visitors.

Its architecture is typically New England and differs markedly from the style of home commonly built on the West Coast. In addition to the two bedrooms, there is a living room, dining room, kitchen and bath. The kitchen may be entered from the hall or the dining room, the two entrances eliminating many steps that would otherwise have to be taken. Connecting the living quarters of the home with a garage is a screened-in porch opening out on a charming patio.

Royal Barry Wills designed and the Western Pine Association erected this Cape Cod cottage. More than any other type of house, Mr. Will's cottages, prove that beauty is produced by proportion and simplicity rather than exterior embellishment, the National Lumber Manufacturers Association states. The choice of wood and the original material of the houses from which Mr. Willis has taken his designs assures the house builder a low-cost home that is durable, warm and attractive, it reminds. The friendliness of the inner wood finishes assure a distinctive type of interior.

Yellow Walls Lend Bedroom Brightens

To brighten a poorly lighted bedroom, a color scheme includes walls painted daffodil yellow, a paler yellow ceiling and white woodwork with thin lines of orange color. Light henna color is used for the floor and the curtains are also yellow. The steel furniture is painted yellow and white, covered with orange-yellow material with white tufting. Lamps and other accessories are of white porcelain.

CHERRY BLOSSOMS

Last year old Mother Nature got in a hurry and bedecked Kenwood's hundreds of Japanese Cherry trees with their gorgeous white cloaks of blossoms long before they were expected.

Heralds have appeared in the form of swollen buds tinged with green and the blossoms are expected not later than March 30th, possibly earlier.

The developers and the residents of Kenwood extend to you a cordial invitation to view this magnificent floral display. If you have friends who do not drive or if you know some shut-in why not bring them with you?

These millions of exquisite blossoms, with Kenwood's lovely homes for a background, is too glorious a sight to keep to ourselves. Let us share it with others.

Washington Home Exhibit Opens Today

World's Fairs Give Model Houses New Emphasis

Model home exhibits are proving fashionable throughout the country, this year's World's Fairs having them among their lists of attractions. Various magazines are promoting the idea with group and individual houses in all parts of the Nation, and now the plan has its realization in the National Capital.

This takes the form of a "Washington Home Exposition" opening today, in which six model homes will be shown. Realizing location is of extreme importance in home building, the presenters of these dwellings have selected as sites, land that affords a fine view of Rock Creek Park and only a few steps away from Sixteenth street and Columbia road northwest.

Every feature in preliminary plans for these homes was carefully studied from the specially designed exterior to the arrangement of kitchen conveniences. Unique treatment was given to fireplaces, windows, doors, interior furnishing and equipment. An interesting application of English architecture also was provided for the exterior design.

Located at 1748-1758 Hobart street, these homes direct attention to Parkside, new development of J. B. Shapiro Co., Inc., builders of 20 years' experience and hundreds of homes. Each containing eight rooms and three baths, these residences are only ten minutes distance from downtown, and close to the Fourteenth and Eighteenth street shopping and amusement sections. Opening today, they are featured by a display house furnished by the Hecht Co., and having rugs from Krikorian Rug Co. To see them, go out Sixteenth street to Mount Pleasant street, continue to Hobart street and then left.

D. C. Mortgages Show Upswing

Reflecting the upsurge in home buying in this area, small home mortgages selected for appraisal by the District of Columbia insuring office of the Federal Housing Administration during February, 1939, more than doubled the total for that month in 1938, Director H. H. Dearing announces. In February, the office received 321 applications for small home mortgage insurance, totaling $1,766,800. In February, 1938, there were 149 applications, involving $861,700.

Small home mortgages which were accepted for insurance in February by the office more than tripled the volume during the month last year. Participating with the rest of the country in what is expected to be the largest year's activity for FHA since beginning its program four years ago, the local office accepted 107 small home mortgages for insurance last month, totaling $595,000. This compared with 28 mortgages accepted for insurance, totaling $171,600, in February, 1938. These figures do not include commitments to builders where purchasers are not yet known.

In addition, the office which handles insuring operations in the District proper and adjacent counties in Virginia and Maryland, has accepted mortgages for insurance on 13 large-scale rental housing projects which either are completed or under construction and involve loans amounting to $13,775,000.

Thermostats Do Away With Buttons

As research marches on in the heating industry, science is taking the place of old-fashioned rule of thumb methods. The steady improvement in the fuel economy of boilers, the appearance of radiators, the precision of thermostats, and the efficiency of steam and hot water heating specialties has been paralleled by equally significant advances in insulation and in knowledge of the relation between outdoor temperatures and fuel consumption.

Science Frees Kitchen Drudge

Where scientific kitchen planning has been developed, housekeeping has been freed from much drudgery. A large contribution toward lightening the kitchen work has been made by the automatic features of refrigerators and ranges, but location of the equipment in proper relation to work is necessary to have the ultimate in kitchen efficiency.

Kitchen cabinets containing flour bins, utensil drawers, towel racks, and other kitchen essentials go far to break the monotonous kitchen routine and meet good housekeeping requirements, but if the cabinets are improperly located, then convenience and efficiency are reduced. Modern homes are sacrificing convention for efficiency, and the traditional arrangement of kitchen equipment is quickly giving way to one promoting convenience.

Dishwashing is a less boring task if all the materials needed for it are stored within easy reach of the sink. Cupboards and shelves should be within arm's reach of the range. A cabinet for packaged goods should be convenient to the refrigerator so the preparation of food does not involve lost steps.

Modernization Lags

The need for increased modernization of homes to include plumbing is shown by a recent Real Property Inventory and Farm Housing Survey, which reports that only 72 per cent of city homes and 14 per cent of farm homes have bathtubs.

J. P. Fitzimmons has designed six two-story brick dwellings which Harry E. and Louis Gorin will construct at 1314-1334 Tewksbury place northwest.

Perma-Stone Cuts Cost of Construction

Water Repellent And Requires No Future Upkeep

Because of the cost of quarrying, transportation and erection, stone has generally been limited to persons of wealth, but today, the beauty and durablity of this type construction is brought within the reach of all, by means of a process called "Perma-Stone," according to its representatives.

This development, made after years of research, makes use of materials which were of stone and have been used for generations in fine and permanent structures. These materials, aggregates, Portland cement, crushed quartz, pure mineral colors, metallic hardener and waterproofers, are scientifically combined and molded in plastic condition directly on a prepared wall where they harden.

It is this combination of materials plus the patented pressure casting and membrane curing, that creates a product impervious to the elements and which grows stronger with age, they explain, adding that the product is a stonelike veneer, permanently secured to walls of wood or steel and bonded directly to block, concrete, tile or used brick.

It requires no expensive footings, and encases the building in an enduring coat which will not burn, decay, be attacked by termites or require future upkeep. Its water repellent hard surface remains remarkably clean under adverse conditions, they remind.

Many hundreds of Perma-Stone buildings in all parts of the country, tested under extreme climatic conditions over a period of years, have proved beyond doubt the permanence and satisfaction of the product, they report. Perma-Stone Sales Co., Inc., with representatives in principal cities, announces location of their Washington division office in Room 553, Washington Building.

Capital Is Fourth In Home Permits

$33 last year, in comparison with $53,412,244 for 1937. In 1938, local building volume amounted to $51,377,522, in value, an advance from $43,294,632, in 1937.

Permit valuations for new residential construction were approximately 14 per cent greater in 1938 than in 1937, Secretary Perkins reported, dollar volume of residential construction being greater than for any year since 1930. Value of permits issued for new nonresidential buildings increased by approximately one-half of 1 per cent in 1938, and value of additions, alterations, and repairs decreased by 15 per cent, total permit valuations increasing by 3 per cent.

Data are based on building permit reports for 1,790 cities having a population of 2,500 or over, with an aggregate population of more than 61,200,000, which report monthly to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Reported value of all building permits during 1938 in the cities covered was approximately $1,753,000,000, of which approximately 50 per cent was accounted for by new residential construction, 32 per cent by new nonresidential construction, and 18 per cent by additions, alterations, and repairs to existing structures.

Increase in the aggregate value of new residences for which permits were issued in 1938 was largely accounted for by the gain in apartment house building. Indicated expenditures for this type of structure increased approximately 50 per cent as compared with 1937, while permit valuations for one-family dwellings increased by about 6 per cent.

Penn. R. R. Cuts Accident Rate 14%

Philadelphia, March 18.—Substantial advances in safety were recorded by the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1938, when accidents to employes per million man-hours worked were reduced by 14 per cent, President M. W. Clement revealed today in announcing the winners of the thirteenth annual safety contest.

The entire system showed only 5.88 accidents per million man-hours, as compared to 6.84 in 1937. Each million man-hours is the equivalent of 400 men working full time for a year. In the contest between the major operating regions of the system for the best results in all departments, the winner was the Western Region, with headquarters at Chicago, with 3.80 accidents per million man-hours.

Modernized Plumbing Halts Fall in Rents

Because the age of the building is often revealed by outmoded plumbing fixtures, apartment house owners frequently find that diminishing rentals can be halted through modernization of bathrooms and kitchens.

The wide difference between the well-designed efficient fixtures of today and the drab plumbing commonly found in buildings built 15 or 20 years ago is often enough in itself to increase returns on apartment properties.

Revival of Collecting Finds Rich and Varied Field to Choose From

Plain Rooms No Longer Are Preferred

Decorative China And Glass Displayed In Many Ways

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

Collecting fell on hard times around the turn of the century. Because in the eighties and nineties it was run into the ground . . . the what-nots and the plate rails were bursting with "things" that to our critical eyes today look pretty awful. Most everything went to extremes during those decades, and so when we swept it all out and took up with new notions . . . mission, . . . ivory walls, . . . taupe rugs, . . . we went to extremes of plainness.

Now we have that out of our systems and are open to suggestions from classic decorative periods of the past, and we find a rich repertoire of beautiful designs to select from. It is interesting to realize that collections of precious bits have always been an intrinsic part of distinguished interiors.

More Warmth and Charm

Interesting collections have personality and bring individuality to a room. As a matter of fact we all do collect whether we intend to or not—that is why our homes have so much more warmth and charm than the grandest hotel room you could find. But there's quite a difference in accumulating odds and ends and in collecting something of interest and value.

We have a neighbor who collects small pitchers, and you can't imagine how many unusual ones she's picked up from time to time. She keeps part of them in hanging wall shelves and part of them on the shelves of a secretary. Another friend collects old glass—she has glass shelves built into a bay window, and you can imagine how attractive this is with sunlight streaking through glass of different colors.

Peasant or provincial pottery is decorative in informal rooms to use in open shelf-dressers, corner cupboards or to hang on the wall. There are fruit design plates that would be a hobby in themselves. Or you might specialize in wild flower plates . . . or in scenic plates . . . or in portrait plates.

Fine Cabinet China

One of the leading New York decorators told me recently that many Americans of taste are collecting fine cabinet china to use decoratively in built-in shelves and cupboards or in breakfront cabinets, secretaries and hanging shelves. You can either assemble a collection like this piece by piece as you come upon something interesting or else you an invest a young fortune in a whole service of precious china, not to use at the table but to make a pattern on an important wall. For a connoisseur's collection of cabinet china, you'll want a handsome piece of furniture to house it—the rich glow of polished walnut or mahogany will set it off with distinction.

Pewter is a favorite of collectors whose homes are on the informal side. Its dull old sheen is particularly handsome against dark walls and with natural light maple. Copper and brass have possibilities too.

If you feel more formal about life than the base metals, then perhaps you'll be interested in the idea of silver or Sheffield plate. That is Ursula Parrott's weakness—she has a magificent collection of old silver that is kept polished to perfection all the time. Mrs. Paul Whiteman collects old Georgian silver which brings great distinction to her dining room.

Small figurines of porcelain or ivory are decorative—they are charming on wall brackets, in special cupboards, or sometimes on tables. Unusual old bottles, old terra cotta animals, fans, china flowers, china birds, carved bits of wood, old watches, snuff boxes—all can add personality to your decorating plans providing they are accommodated gracefully into the picture. But don't just stick them around, or you'll have a cluttered effect. Here are the best types of furniture for collectors of ornamental objets d'art:

The breakfront cabinet—a distinguished piece that will dominate the scene. It provides ample space for a collection of special treasures. But remember that the breakfront is a fine thing in itself so you won't want to put trinkets in it. Be sure your collection is worthy of the furniture.

The corner cupboard—in maple, mahogany or walnut, is an interesting piece for a china collection or for some unusual things.

The pier cabinet—is graceful for small bibelots.

What-nots—They are back in style and charming when they are used with discrimination for china, miniatures, figurines, bibelots.

Tables for collectors—The dumbwaiter or tier table lends itself graciously to use for small figurines, snuff boxes, bits of glass, porcelain or ivory or even for little family pictures framed in good frames.

Wall shelves—are available in large or small sizes and in all popular wood finishes.

Wall brackets—in gilt, natural wood, plaster or glass are delightful for spotlighting your best small objects.

Open shelf dressers—for informal rooms will show off pottery, pewter, copper, ship models, or some unusual collection.

The secretary desk—is a perfect piece of furniture for many types of collections.

But don't stop with these obvious pieces—browse around your favorite furniture department and you'll find many unusual one-of-a-kind cabinets, tables, and so on that would be perfect for some special collection. Just keep in mind the fact that anything worth collecting is worth showing off properly.

Side, Rear Porches Become Sun Parlors

Seldom-used side and rear porches, carry-overs from an era when numerous porches were prevailing architectural features, can be converted into sun parlors with comparatively little remodeling and expense.

A glassed-in sunroom, providing maximum sun and light, is frequently the most popular room in the house. Besides being a cheerful place in which to sit, a sunroom can be used for flowers and often is made into a summer sleeping porch.

Over Half of Buildings Put Up Before 1915

Over half the 8,000,000 structures examined in a governmental survey in 203 urban areas were built before 1915 and one-fourth before 1895.

The largest proportion built before 1915 was found in the northeastern cities (60 per cent) and the smallest proportion (31 per cent) in the southwestern cities.

A beautiful gum-paneled library and lavatory complete the first floor plan.

The master suite contains an exceptionally large bedroom with built-in vanity, desk, private bath and sitting room. There is a porch adjoining. A boy's room with two built-in bunks, each with individual light and book case, two guest bedrooms of master size and a beautiful tiled bath.

The basement contains a large recreation room of exclusive styling. The paneling is of Peckey Cypress in natural finish; there is a large oak bar with sink and storage cabinet, big stone fireplace and built-in book-cases, and a fine tiled lavatory. Maid's room is completely finished and has an adjoining bath. Laundry and furnace room. Fully insulated with rock wool.

There are many unusual features in this new home. The first floor has 2 large closets—there are 10 on the second floor, including a big cedar storage closet—and 4 closets in the basement. The attic is completely finished and heated. The heating system is American Radiator's famous Sunbeam. Living room, hall, dining room and library are floored with black walnut and pegged. An outside fireplace invites recreation and friendship.

You'll enjoy visiting this new Washington Post Display Home—because it is different!

Public Interest Grows in Nation's Flower Shows

Old and Young Join Together In Mutual Interest at Seven Major Exhibits Each Year

By Katherine Barrett Pozer.

The great spring flower shows held throughout the country each year attract thousands of visitors who are interested in the newest plans for gardens and in the latest improvements in blooms. Commercial growers display their wares in new and fascinating ways, and garden clubs and horticultural societies have beautiful exhibits of garden arrangements and specimens in which all the ingenuity of their most skilled members is shown for the pleasure of visitors.

While the shows have been held for a number of years (this is the sixty-eighth annual spring flower show held by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, the twenty-sixth annual international flower show and the sixteenth Philadelphia flower show) it is only in the past decade that flower shows have become a center of interest to the general public. Crowds have become so great that it has been difficult to find space to accommodate the many thousands of visitors. Last year the four floors of the Grand Central Palace were continually crowded during the entire week of the show.

Flower Crowds Different

Crowds at flower shows differ from crowds at all other events, for the fact that there are no bored faces. They are tired perhaps, but still unwilling to miss one moment of the changing beauty of display. There is an interesting cross section of society dowagers, and their chauffers forget for the moment their difference of position in their mutual interest, for his small house garden is just as important to him as the vast acres of her estate. Old and young join together in this mutual interest and discuss the varied merits of the new things on display; husbands and wives take hurried notes and anxiously discuss if the family budget can be stretched to include a new rose of particular merit, or a shrub which will be just what that skimpy place on the fence line needs.

There are seven major shows which interest the people of the East and Midwest. This year the season started early, as the National Flower Show was held in Houston in the middle of February. The other six shows are held in March. The International Flower Srow in New York was held last week. The Boston show opened Thursday and continues through Tuesday; the St. Louis show, March 19 to 26; the Philadelphia show March 20 to 25; the Chicago show, March 25 to April 2 and the Detroit show on these same dates.

276 Main Prize Events

Two hundred and seventy-six main prize events, and numerous garden club competitions were included in the schedule of the New York show. This year there was a rearrangement of the large gardens on the ground floor. Three private growers' gardens formed a harmonious cluster at the Park avenue side of the center aisle. They were placed by Col. R. H. Montgomery, S. Z. Mitchell and Mrs. Payne Whitney. On the south aisle was another group of gardens of private growers, Mrs. William Zeigler, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field and the estate of H. McK. Twombley. The requirements of this class called for 600 square feet which might include lawns, flower beds shrubbery, roses or bulb beds with much latitude permitted.

Five competitors were included in the commercial class for gardens of 1,200 feet. These occupied the central portion of the main floor flanking the middle asile. Other commercial gardens were those of 750 feet, and rock gardens, 150 square feet and F. H. Leubuscher was in competition with Shogo Myaid's Japanese foyer garden for a rock garden covering 400 feet.

Extensive Exhibits.

The Garden Club of America, the Federated Garden Clubs of New York and the Garden Club of New Jersey as usual had extensive exhibits. The arrangements changed from day to day, were done by the leading students of arrangement in America. Each floor of the Grand Central Palace presented an infinite variety of exhibits, new ideas in gardening, equipment and decoration and everything to assist in making more beautiful ones home and community.

"Gardening Down the Ages" was a feature of the show sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. This display showed how gardens have developed in the past 2,000 years. Eight historic gardens were shown, the monastic, medieval, Elizabethean, French, Moorish and Irish and the garden of tomorrow, a modern garden built as a projection of 1950.

Another feature of the show was a New England mansion house and its estate, a group of a dozen different gardens set in wide lawns in front of the anthentic reproduction of an old-time mansion house. This display, which filled the grand hall, was the work of the Massachusetts Garden Clubs under a committee headed by Mrs. Irving C. Wright, of the Chestnut Hill Garden Club, aided by a committee including, Mrs. John S. Ames, Mrs. Lawrence A. Brown, Mrs. Sewell Cabot, Mrs. Robert B. Choate, Mrs. John G. Coolidge, Mrs. William Dexter, Mrs. William Stuart Forbes, Mrs. F. L. Higginson, Mrs. William A. Parker, Mrs. Henry Richards, Mrs. Edwin P. Seaver and Mrs. Malcolm Stone.

Make Trip in One Day

Many local gardeners are planning to attend the Philadelphia show which opens tomorrow and remains open through March 25. Since the completion of the Gov. Nice highway, it is possible to make the trip up and back and see the show in one day. This year new features and artistic settings have been designed by Walter V. D. Hengel. As in past years th efamous Widener accacias will be shown, this collection of many varieties is a never ending pleasure to all flower lovers and each year the plants are displayed in a new manner. Another popular feature of other years will be the competitive display of hardy primroses, and one entire section will be decoted to roses. The private growers section will be the largest in years, according to show officials, and will include miscellaneous cut flowers, palms and foliage plants, ferns and plants in flower.

In the garden section there will be rock gardens, waterfalls and cascades, lily ponds and woodland settings. The orchid section as in past years will have exhibits from many noted collectors.

Unusual and practical ideas for flower arrangements, rock gardens, pools, wall fountains, outdoor fireplaces and sun porches will be in the garden club section. Bird baths and bird sanctuaries will also be a feature of the club's exhibits. The show has the co-operation of all the principal growers and florists of the section, as well as scores of garden clubs and the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society. The chairman is W. Altee Burpee, jr. The show is held in the Commercial Museum, Thirty-fourth and Spruce streets and opens at noon tomorrow. On other days the hours are from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m.

Women Stage Chicago Show

The Chicago Flower Show is of particular interest as it is planned and staged intirely by women, the members of the Illinois Garden Club. It is the only major show which is wholly staged by women and which is wholly amateur. Added interest is given the show in that Mrs. O. W. Dynes, who is the president of the National Council of Garden Clubs, has been the general chairman of the show since its beginning seven year ago.

The show is primarily a show of entries made by local garden clubs. These entries are really problems in gardening and flower arrangement worked out and placed in competition with exhibits made by other clubs. Held on the Navy pier in Chicago, the entries form a vast picture of horticultural beauty and ingenuity.

Each year the show has a theme. Last year it was "Gardens From Maine to California," when the seven regions of the national council were represented. This year the theme will be "Illinois Through the Years," and will show the horticultural history of the State. At the entrance will be the primeval forest, then will come the simple herb gardens of the pioneer background with a reproduction of a stockade and such homely evidences as candle making and soap making. The Greek revival era will follow, an era which left its mark in Illinois by many fine examples of architecture which will stand. Following this will be the gardens of Civil War times, with a reproduction of Grant's home at Galena. Next will be a reproduction of Aldine Square, that famous residential district on Chicago's south side at the time of the first World's Fair. There will be the elaborate planting so fashionable at the time. The series will be completed by "Illinois of Today" and the "Gardens of Tomorrow."

Spring comes ahead of time at the large flower shows. Hints of what any home owner may do with his grounds may be found in many of the exhibits. These two pictures of exhibits at the 1938 Chicago Flower Show give an idea of what may be seen this year. The herb of the Pennsylvania House is shown above. Below is the formal box garden and serpentine wall of the Virginia House.

Orchids, Symbol of Wealth in North America, Have Religious Significance in the Jungles

Indians Decorate Their Altars With Beautiful Blooms

By Anne Parris

White lilies, symbols of the resurrection, will be on the altars of our churches this Easter.

Before the altars of many a little church in South America there will be another flower—the orchid. They are there not only on Easter Sunday but one may see them almost any day throughout the year.

Orchids? Why are they there? What is the significance?

To most of us, orchids mean the costly, exotic flower we see flaunting its beauty on a dowager at the opera, or a pretty girl at a dance. To the South American Indian, it means infinitely more.

Knowing the reason, but eager to hear it from the lips of the weazened old Indian I found in an adobe church placing orchids before the altar of the Vigin Mary, I asked, "Why are you doing that, Pedro?"

He looked up at me in surprise, "You not know, senora? You not know the great God made these out of wind and dew? Si, si, out of wind and dew are they made. Miracle flowers they are. Sacred."

Grow From Air

That is true. Most of them are miracle flowers, for almost out of nothing, is spun the magic of orchids.

There are two kinds of orchids. One, like our lady slipper, grows in the ground, but the vast majority, among them the cattleya, the pinkish lavendar orchid generally used as a corsage, gets all its exquisite coloring, its exotic beauty from the air, the rain and sun. Deep in jungles they cling to branches high in trees. In conservatories, one finds them growing in wire baskets, or pots, in which there is nothing but moss, put there to hold the roots and moisture.

The Aztecs and Mayans dedicated the orchid to their gods and goddesses. Upon the banishment of heathen mythology, they were transferred to the Virgin Mary or some saint. What we now call Lady Slipper, was once, the Slipper of our Lady, or Mary's Slipper.

That some of the natives still associate the orchid with their forgotten gods is evident, by an altar discovered several years ago, by an explorer in the wilds of British Honduras. The altar was three feet high, was comprised of green, straight sticks laid side by side, arched over by a bower of the sacred javin wood. Georgeous orchids were the sole offering on this jungle altar. Was this a sacrifice to appease an angry god, or was it a token of thanks, a melagro, for some favor bestowed? hTe answer remains hidden in the deep past.

Dove Orchid

The Dove orchid of Panama is also held in reverence by the natives, but for a different reason. This is not an air plant, but grows in the ground. In the center of the white, waxy flower is a perfect image of a dove with outstretched wings, as though about to alight. It is believed that God created it at the moment the Holy Ghost rested upon the head of the Son of Man. So they call it the Holy Ghost, or the Espiritu Santo orchid.

Due to its religious significance, it became rare. It was almost eradicated a few years ago, when the United States flooded a jungle in Panama the only place in which it grew.

We are fortunate in having several of these rare plants in our Botanical Garden in Washington. They are not blooming at the present time. However, there is another Dove orchid in blossom. It is a large, pink flower which comes from the Phillipines. Like the Holy Ghost orchid, the dove is perfect. But there is no religious significance attached to this lovely flower, because it is not white.

There is an orchid which resembles a gay, dancing girl and there is the Butterfly orchid, which looks like a swarm of butterflies in flight. There is the Bull orchid from Costa Rica, which has two long horns and brown, bulging eyes. There are the spider and octopus orchids. To see the exquisite Moth orchids in the moonlight is breathtaking.

The orchid—one of the world's most beautiful flowers

Beetle Army Threatens Lawns of Washington

Best Prevention Is Thorough And Intelligent Preparation And Heavy Poisoning of Soil

By Crowell Baynes.

This season and next are likely to be critical for many of the lawns of Washington and its suburbs. The Japanese beetle is in the offing and is almost sure to make trouble on nearly all lawns hereabouts. The best prevention is through an intelligent preparation.

Authorities in Maryland, Virginia and the District will give the word for the poisoning offensive when the time is right, but as far as lawns are concerned the very best advance treatment is to put lawns in the very best possible condition before the beetles become really abundant.

Poison the Soil

The main reliance in preserving a good lawn is to poison the soil as directed. If the lawn is a thick mat of strong, well-rooted turf growing in soil that is full of plant food, the lawn may be expected to come through the early attacks of the beetle and the poisoning ordeal with relatively little injury. But if the grass is thin and weak, the early attacks of the beetle will weaken it, and the poison will probably injure it further. If it gets so run down that reseeding is necessary in the first season or two when the beetle is highly destructive, it will be difficult to plant grass and get a good stand. Experience with the poisoning of lawns i nNew Jersey has been that established plants are not injured much, but the poison interferes with germination of seed, and the seedling grass plants have a hard time to get themselves established.

Year of Grace Foreseen

Poisoning may be necessary this summer in a few areas in the eastern part of the district and the eastern suburbs. For most of the vicinity, however, there will be a year or two, perhaps more, of grace before the beetles become destructive. The best program now is to seed and fertilize, fertilize and seed, and get the turf to where it can stand the invasion and withstand the poison.

For lawns that are in poor condition now, it may be as well to omit spring seeding this year, and concentrate on fertilization and improvement of the physical condition of the soil with a view to spading up the unsatisfactory sod in late summer, fertilizing further, and reseeding in early fall to give the new grass a good chance to get started before cold weather. For poor lawns, a heavy dressing with manure, with addition of phosphate and potash, will be good treatment. Spring rains will wash the fertilizer into the soil, and if the manure brings weed seeds they can be disposed of when the lawn is dug up in August.

Good lawns should be kept good with liberal feeding, hand weeding if it is needed, and top dressing of good quality that is safe as regards weed seeds. A good top dressing may be made up of equal parts of loamy soil, plaster sand, peat moss, and thoroughly rotted manure. If the manure is not so thoroughly rotted as to insure freedom from weed seed, it will be safer to substitute the granulated sheep manure that is on the market. To this may be added commercial fertilizer at the rate of about 15 pounds of 4-12-4 ro 4-10-6 analysis for each 1,000 square feet. Most of the prepared fertilizer for lawns carry a higher proportion of nitrogen than this, but it is relatively easy to add quick acting nitrogen as needed, and with the beetle threat in mind it is well to make sure of plenty of phosphorus and potash to insure strong growth.

Spread Top Dressing Evenly

Spread the top dressing evenly and rake it in around the crowns. It is safer to make two or three light dressings than one heavy one, allowing the grass a few days' growth between applications. If there are low spots where water collects, fill them and seed the surface.

For fairly good lawns—not good, but not so bad as to require reseeding—the treatment may well be as suggested for good lawns, but with considerable more added seeding. A good way to thicken up the turf is to reserve a bushel or so of the top dressing. Sift it through coarse window screen, and then add nearly as much lawn grass seed as would be used for sowing the whole area—about 3 pounds to 1,000 square feet—and mix it thoroughly with the soil. Then broadcast this mixture evenly on the top dressing.

In early spring the soil usually is moist enough for grass seedlings, but if there are a few drying days sprinkle with a fine spray to keep the surface moistened to a depth of an inch at least.

Year for Liberal Treatment

This is a year for liberal treatment of lawns, particularly in the matter of phosphate and potash. The response to nitrogen fertilization of grass plants is so quick and obvious that there is a tendency to unbalance the feeding by giving repeated nitrogen tonics. With the beetles approaching, it is wise to make sure that the slower acting fertilizers are available and abundant. Bone meal and wood ashes are desirable, but expensive, and it is usually cheaper to buy mixed fertilizers. If the nitrogen content is low the price is likely to be correspondingly low, and nitrogen can be supplied later as needed.

For a spring tonic for lawns cottonseed meal is rather expensive, but is one of the most satisfactory of lawn fertilizers. It is not quite as quick acting as the soluble salts, sodium nitrate or ammonium sulphate, but it is safe and liberates nitrogen over a period of several weeks.

Extra attention and liberal expenditure in catering to the lawn this season is likely to prove true economy in the long run, because of the approach of the beetles. If the beetles destroy a lawn the owner is likely to have a real job and considerable expense in restoring it.

Chevy Chase (Md.) Garden Club

"Information Please," with many subjects of gardens and planting discussed was the subject of the recent meeting of the Chevy Chase (Md.) Garden Club held at the home of the president, Mrs. H. H. Semmes. The early March meeting of the club had as the subject, 'Shady Gardens."

Now Is Time of Year to Build Cold Frame for Spring Plants

Contrivance Is Well Called Gardener's Best Friend

There is quite a bit of wood-work connected with gardening, and winter is a good time to be at it. A major task is building a cold-frame, which is well called the amateur gardener's best friend.

In those tantalizing week of early spring, when a warm sun one day sets the garden fever burning, and freezing weather that night chills the courage, a cold frame is priceless.

Everybody needs one, though he may have a hot-bed, or even a greenhouse in addition. To the great majority of home gardeners, the cold frame will suffice for all real needs in early sowing.

Easy to build, and simple to operate, it enables seeds to be sown several weeks before it would be safe to sow them in the open. With the protection of the glass sash on frosty nights the seeds will germinate, and the seedings grow sturdily, until they are large enough to transplant into the open ground.

To make a cold frame, the accompanying illustrations give full and detailed instructions. The soil which is used in it should be fine, friable top soil, well pulverized. Sow the seed as you would in a flat, or hotbed, water thoroughly and firm the soil over the seed pressing smooth with a brick, or piece of board.

Watering now becomes of great importance. At no time should the soil be allowed to become hard and dry. Yet excessive watering may cause the seeds to rot, sour the soil, or cause "damping off." When the plants appear, thin them out, allowing each to grow singly without crowding.

After the seedlings appear, watering is still important. Good drinks, between which the soil dries somewhat without becoming crusty and hard, should be the rule. And fresh air is the next great need. On sunny days, the sash should be lifted early in the morning, otherwise the temperature may quickly run to a dangerous height. Inspect the cold frame at least every morning and afternoon, and remember it whenever the weather changes abruptly. You will soon learn the program needed to keep the young plants growing vigorously, which means with good heavy roofs and strong stems, stocky rather than tall and spindling.

When transplanting time comes, take up the seedlings with as little disturbance of the roots as possible, and get them back into the ground as soon as you can.

Garden Clubs

Following an interest in roses, which has made the Woodridge Garden Club rank high in rose winning honors at the local flower shows, the club is taking an active interest this year in trying to further a more general interest in rose growing by the establishment of a rose test garden in Langdon Park, which will serve the double purpose of beautifying the park and in demonstrating the capacity of the section for growing fine roses. Approval has not as yet been given by the authorities but the club has made all plans to go ahead as soon as official saction is given. They will furnish a thousand roses of ten varieties to start the planting.

Funds for the rose garden will be partially obtained by the spring sale of roses which the club has sponsored. They obtained a large number of Texas roses and have had them for sale not only to members of the club but to other garden clubs and individuals. Over three thousand roses were disposed of by the club at the sales which were held during the past week.

At the March meeting plans for the coming season were discussed and for the three spring flower shows which the club will sponsor, the tulip, narcissus and iris shows. Large numbers of gladiolus have been ordered and the club has plans for the ordering of azaleas and rhodendrons. The speaker at the meeting was Dr. A. J. Pieters, who was until his retirement last year the Department of Agriculture's pioneer and leading authority on turf culture. He is now on the staff of the green section of the American Golf Association. Dr. Pieters subject was "Prospects in Turf Culture."

20,000 See Life Home In 4 Weeks

Display House Is Still Open For Inspection

At close of the fourth week's exhibition, more than 20,000 persons had viewed the Washington demonstration home of Life Magazine. Sponsored by The Post, this residence, built as the local unit in the magazine's national campaign to promote home ownership, has attracted hundreds of visitors daily regardless of weather conditions. Located at 5720 Lambeth road, in Greenwich Forest, Md., the show house was built by the Cafritz Construction Co., developers of that community. Still open for inspection, it is furnished by the interior decorating department of Lansburgh & Bro. department store.

Discussing the floor coverings of the exhibit dwelling, members of the interior decorating staff of the Lansburgh establishment remind they constitute a very important adjunct to any well-decorated room, and that in selecting carpets for the model house, color and texture were important considerations.

The drawing room carpet, which covers practically the entire floor is a modified eighteenth century pattern, derived from that period of distinctive design when floral figures and sprays were emphasized. Today these designs have been revamped for the finest types of floor coverings, as exemplified in the carpet's charming floral and fern pattern.

The cleverly colored sprays in tones of cedar, rose, blue and green combined with brown fern fronds, superimposed on a soft moresque beige ground, fit unobtrusively into the motif as a whole and provide a perfect foil for the draperies and upholstery fabrics. The fact that this carpet is available in 27-inch, 9 and 12 foot widths makes it adaptable for any room, large or small.

At the entrance of the house is a richly colored Oriental rug, and the same Lilihan patterned scatter-size rugs are also found in the library. Gorgeous wine tones and luster of the yarns, which blend so beautifully with the selected color harmony of this room, seem to add just the correct touch of elegance to an otherwise comfortable attraction.

In the bedroom, done in French Provincial style, the rug of old blue and tan is in perfect character. The design, created by a great variety of modernized peasant motifs, is arranged to form an indefinite block formation; combining with the traditional maple furniture, harmonious draperies, and matching bedspread. The room is permeated by a feeling of quaintness and charm.

For the master bedroom, a soft beige twisted yarn broadloom is used. Depth of pile is emphasized and a more practical carpet is secured in the twisted yarns. Here again, care has been exercised to have the floor covering decorative without detracting from the richness of the mahogany furniture or the subtle tones of the wall paper and accessories. Small accessories have been used throughout the house to give a correct note, Chinese figures and bowls, multicolored "after dinner" coffee cups, book ends, a glass ship with growing ivy entwined in the sail, a clock-radio combination and many ash trays are found in just the right places.

Harvester Plant Begun in Baltimore

International Harvester Co. broke ground last week for an addition to its present motor truck factory branch on Twenty-fifth street, Baltimore, Md. The large brick building will cost the company approximately $60,000, and will be 35,000 square feet in size, taking up the entire block on Twenty-fifth street, from Garrett to Kirk avenues, when completed.

This new building will be used for storage of new and used motor trucks, with accommodations for about 300 units, and room enough to house the necessary amount of trucks to supply the entire Baltimore branch territory, which includes Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, and parts of Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia.

Tomorrow to See New Studebaker

Lee D. Butler has announced that the first showing of the new Studebaker "Champion," will take place tomorrow at a luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel when the Studebaker Corporation will be host to a selected list of guests. Invited to the preview will be dealers and salesmen from Washington, Baltimore and Richmond.

The luncheon will be held in the main ballroom of the hotel and the Chinese room will be arranged as an automobile salon, with models of the new Champion on display.

Because of the importance of Washington as a distributing center for automobiles, George D. Keller, vice president of the corporation, and Scott Fletcher, general sales manager, of South Bend, Ind., as well as W. K. Erdman, of Philadelphia, regional manager, are coming to Washington for the premiere.

The new car, according to Mr. Butler, has been four years in the making. In 1935, corporation officials began to plan for a car to enter the low priced field. Engineers were given a free hand and the result is the newest model. The car is of striking design and powered by a six-cylindered engine.

Dodge Auto Dealers To Meet Tomorrow

Dodge automobile dealers of Washington and nearby points will meet tomorrow at Wardman Park Hotel for a series of open-forum discussions of their business and reviews of sales plans that will have a bearing on activities in the spring.

The principal speaker will be Frank J. Timmens, general sales manager of the Dodge division of Chrysler Corporation. Mr. Timmens will discuss principles underlying the automobile trade and of its evolution through the years. Methods by which the large automobile factories and their dealers conduct their business are as different from former practices as this year's cars are different from earlier models, it is explained.

New Trade Pacts Predicted With South America

New York, March 18 (AP).—New trade arrangements between four Latin American nations and the United States, following the recent agreement with Brazil, were predicted today in Wall Street international financial circles. The nations named, in the order in which it was thought the agreements might be concluded, are Argentina, Chile, Cuba and Colombia.

With Brazil, these nations last year represented a purchasing power of $300,000,000 in nUited States' products. Their sales to the United States were even greater.

Argentina, as a nation which has kept itself clear of top-heavy debts and whose national vocabulary does not contain the word "default" is most especially cultivated by the State Department.

Wall Street international finance experts say that Argentina's Ambassador to Washington, Felipe Espil, is likely to fly down to Buenos Aires within the next few weeks to report to his government personally on plans for a new trade treaty which would permit the sale of more United States products to his nation—and, incidentally, the purchase of more Argentine products in this country for United States dollars.

Braizl last year sold $97,937,000 worth of produce—mainly coffee—to the United States and purchased $61,955,000 worth of American goods, selling only $40,707,000 worth to this country. That is a sore point with Argentina and a source of difficulty with the Argentine-United States trade negotiations.

Wheat Yields After Brisk Early Gains

War Fears Put Prices Up but Weather News Pulls Them Down

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 18.—Wheat prices jumped as much as a cent in brisk trading early today, then leveled toward yesterday's close and finished ⅛ lower to ¼ higher.

Early buying was stimulated by the unsettled European political situation, sharply higher Winnipeg prices and improved milling demand. May wheat on the board of trade advanced a cent to 68⅞ and July and September were up ¾ cent at 68¾ and 69⅝ respectively.

Tension abroad lost much of its power in the pit later in the session as traders took more notice of favorable weather news for the domestic winter wheat crop and increased offers. Wheat closed ⅛ lower to ¼ higher, May and July 68@68⅛; corn unchanged to ⅜ down, May 47⅜@47½, July 49¼@49½; oats unchanged to ¼ up, May 28¾; soy beans ⅛ to 1⅛ up, May 88½; rye unchanged to ¼ up, May 42½; lard 5 to 8 cents up a hundredweight.

Late Support Aids Market As Heavy Selling Persists

Leaders Driven Down 1 to 5 Pionts
2-Hour Volume Exceeds Million Shares
Bonds Decline in Active Trading

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, March 18.—Europe's troubles again inspired selling in the stock market today and leading issues dropped 1 to 5 points before late support cut losses substantially in most cases. While nervousness over the war outlook abroad brought heavy offerings in virtually all departments at the opening, thoughts that the market may have been oversold, even if the totalitarian and democratic powers clash, attracted some speculative buying before the sound of the final gong.

Blocks of 1,000 to 6,000 shares changed hands on the way down at the start. Dealings dwindled on the come-back move, but the total for the two hours was 1,007,240 shares, the largest for any Saturday since October 22, last. The aggregate a week ago was 533,085 shares.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .7 of a point at 49.2. On the week this composite showed a net decline of 4 points, the biggest fall since March a year ago.

The international situation held Wall street's attention to the exclusion of most domestic business items and Washington developments. Coupled with the growing fears in the financial district that the talked of business tax revisions may not materialize, and that the Administration's program to aid industry might meet with obstacles, early recovery sentiment in the markets was more depressed than for some time.

Particular notice was taken of notes of Great Britain and France denouncing the Reich's absorption of Czech-Slovakia as illegal. Stocks off 1 to nearly 4 in the day's proceedings included United States Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, DuPont, Westinghouse, American Telephone, Montgomery Ward, American Smelting, Philip Morris, Santa Fe and allied chemical. United States Gypsum, on relatively light dealings, dropped 6¼.

Aircrafts Resistant

Aircrafts resisted th etrend on the idea the rearmament race would gain momentum whether or not war is avoided. United Aircraft andGlen Martin were among the few shares to close slightly ahead in the brief session.

Finishing fractionally lower in the curb—but well above the day's worst marks—were Electric Bond & Share, American Gas & Electric, American Cyanamid "B" and Gulf Oil. Turnover of 161,000 shares compared with 118,000 a week ago.

Stocks started to skid Monday when the Fuehrer indicated he would intervene in the Czech-Slovak independence controversy, and Friday the market experienced its most severe relapse since January 23 Heavy offerings from abroad were followed by unloading here.

Rails Lead Bond Decline

The bond market was thrown into a sharp downward spin today by heavy offerings which swelled the total day's business to the largest for a 2-hour session in a year and a half. Losses at the close ranged from major fractions to 3 points and in isolated instances more.

A desire on the part of owners to lighten commitments pending a better view of the latest European political turmoil was the almost universal explanation heard in bond circles.

In addition, some fair-sized profits had accured to purchasers of South American Bonds within the last ten days coincident with the United States-Brazil Trade Agreement. Speedy action to clinch in realty what was on paper in the way of advantage, made its contribution to the force of the retreat.

United States Government obligations, slow to reflect tension in investment circles over world affairs, finally took cognizance of what was going on and dropped as much as 18/32 of a point with turnover much more than is ordinarily the case even in a full session. Low-yield corporate bonds were correspondingly on the defensive, although most declines wer small.

Heaviest losers throughout the list included: International Hydro Electric 6s at 79¼, American Water Works 6s at 103, American & Foreign Power 5s at 52½, Western Union 5s at 62½, Southern Railway 4s at 53½, Italian Government 7s at 62, French Stamped 7½s at 107, Illinois Central Refunding 4s at 51¾, Milan 6½s at 46, Czech 8s of 1951 at 29, Colombia 6s at 23⅞ and Brazil 8s at 23¼.

Sales totaled $6,157,550, compared with $5,517,500 last Saturday. The day's turnover was the largest for Saturday since October 23, 1937. The largest losers as a group, as measured by the Associated Press averages, were the rails, with a decline of 1.3 points.

Corporation 1938 Taxes Top Net 54%

U. S. Steel Corp. Paid $48,842,131 Taxes, Lost $7,717,454

New York, March 18.—A dollar for the tax gatherer to match each 65 cents of net income seems to have been the rule in 1938 for a large cross-section of American industry according to a compilation by the Standard Statistics Co. today. In the case of 80 corporations, taxes totaled $203,682,751 and net income $133,685,202.

Only a small proportion of corporations segregate their total tax payments, Federal, State and local, in their public income accounts, and those which do so report have no means of even estimating the huge amount of hidden taxes concealed in the costs of raw materjals or equipment purchased. With these limitations, however, the following table compares total tax payments and net income for 1938 for a representative group of 80 companies at random:

The utilities are the only large group that consistently segregate taxes (other than Federal income payments) in their annual reports and this explains the heavy weighting of the total of 80 companies with 40 utilities. It is still the exception rather than the rule for industrial companies to report their total tax poyments.

The generally poor business year, 1938, reveals some startling figures for the individual corporations. United States Steel last year paid total taxes of $48,842,131 and went in the red to the extent of $7,717,454. Bethlehem Steel paid out $7,586,552 in taxes, against net income of $5,250,239 which was only 70 per cent of preferred dividend requirements. Common stockholders got nothing.

Big Utility Aims To Sell Million Refrigerators

New York, March 18 (AP).—Floyd L. Carlisle, chairman of Consolidated Edison system, largest urban utility in the world, said today he hope to create thousands of jobs throughout the country as a result of a co-operative business enterprise to be launched Monday.

On that day, by arrangement with more than a score of leading manufacturers and financing companies, Carlisle will begin a four-month campaign to place an automatic refrigerator in each of 1,000,00 homes in this area now without one. A minimum goal of $10,000,000 sales has been set.

The refrigerators will be sold on the basis of small additions to the electric bill in each month. It has been tried successfully before here and elsewhere, but never on so broad a scale, he said.

Jersey Central to Omit Interest on Bonds

New York, March 17 (AP).—Central Railroad of New Jersey notified the New York Stock Exchange today it would not pay the quarterly interest on its registered general mortgage 4 and 5 per cent bonds. The reason, said the company in a letter to bondholders, is that both earnings and the tax situation in New Jersey have been unsatisfactory.

"It is clear," said the letter, "that in the absence of a substantial reduction of its tax burden and a material adjustment of its fixed charges, the company cannot avoid court reorganization.

Home Building For February Ten-Year Peak

New York, March 18 (AP).—February's residential building contract awards were the greatest since 1929, F. W. Dodge Corporation, building statisticians, reported today.

The month's awards in the 37 Eastern States totaled $79,020,000, compared with $40,023,000 in February, 1938.

Thomas S. Holden, vice president of the Dodge Corporation, commented: "Although the public housing program is growing in importance, it is significant that the greatest contribution to the residential building gains was made by private enterprise.

"At the end of the first two months of this year, private residential contracts amounted to $140,276,000, as compared with only $19,907,000 for public projects."

Universal Credit Opens National Ad. Campaign

Detroit, March 18.—A nation-wide advertising campaign using newspapers, magazines and billboards has been instituted by the Universal Credit Co. to inform the public about the important business of automobile financing, Ernest Kanzler, president, announced here today.

"Our campaign is purely educational," said Mr. Kanzler, "It will discuss publicly the important business of automobile financing. A large part of the income of the American people each year goes into automobile installment purchases, simply because the device of credit provides a convenient way to get new transportation without the immediate outlay of considerable cash."

Bombay Selling Hits Cotton

New York, March 18 (AP).—The cotton futures markets today was swamped with heavy foreign liquidation, principally from Bombay, with support limited to scale down demand from the trade, final prices were 8 to 13 points lower.

Highlight of an active session was the sale of 15,000 to 20,000 bales of May and July cotton by Bombay brokers. Price differences between New York and Bombay were at the widest of the season and straddlers were taking profits.

Crude oil was quoted at 5¾ cents nominal in the Southeast, 5¾ cents bid in the Valley and 5¾ cents nominal in Texas.

Cleveland Park

Cleveland Park, blessed by nature, a bit old fashioned, superior intellectually and socially but democratic, is perhaps unsurpassed for its wholesome American character. Its elevation makes it a pleasant refuge in hot weather and its distance from the office district, about 15 minutes, is advantageous to Congressional and other business people. This house is above the average of the community in size and quality but not too much so. Its hospitable spaciousness and common sense arrangement reflect the eminent scientist who built it. Five major bedrooms, 3 smaller ones, very large recreation and living rooms, large screened rear porch on 2nd floor, butler's pantry, air-conditioni ng, 3 baths.

Price, $32,500.00, which is $17,500.00 less than the original figure.

Military Fanfare Is Very Breath of Life to Old Soldier Victor McLaglen

A Uniform His Natural Environment

Fans Think of Him As Perpetual Captain Flagg and He Lives Part Off Screen, Too

By Lucie Neville

Most of Talkietown's players check their movie roles with their costumes when they leave the studios. Heavy lovers go home to wives and families, screen mothers step out at night clubs, and pathetic waifs of the studio streets hop into waiting limousines. They're tired of playing and they want no busman's holiday.

But Hollywood's Military Man likes to keep up the game after hours. A uniform seems natural when you've worn a real one off screen and on for 38 years, as Victor McLaglen has. People just naturally expect to see a Sam Browne belt and boots on him.

Fans think of him as a perpetual Capt. Flagg. Hollywood sees his Light Horse Troop with its bands and banners. Between the two he automatically has been cast as a military man, and sometimes he is accused of being a militant one. McLaglen himself can't decide which he loves best: The good citizenship trophy given him by the American Legion, or his Academy Award statuette for the best performance of 1935, in the title role of "The Informer."

Currently, he is out of uniform in "Captain Fury," though still in character as a soldier of fortune—a roistering, fighting Robin Hood of Australia's colonization days. But he has worn uniforms since he was 14, his first that of a trooper in the King's Life Guards at Windsor Palace, later as a captain of the Cheshires with active service in Mesopotamia. The years between saw him prospecting in Canada, boxing in the ring and in circuses, a "living statue" in vaudeville, physical instructor to an Indian rajah, and following other trades that a big guy with an itching heel and handy fists could turn to. British films changed his course from the diplomatic service after the war, and "What Price Glory?" ended his soldiering days.

Ended them except on the screen, where he has worn the uniforms of Legionnaires, Marines, Scottish Highlanders, British sergeants, American officers and even the plumes and epaulets of mythical kingdoms' armies. The best compromise he could make between a military past and a movie present was to don the regalia of McLaglen's Light Horse Troop.

Called a Flag-Waver

Critics call him a flag-waver; friends say he maintains the troop because he loves a uniform. McLaglen says it began as a patriotic organization. What Hollywood overlooks is McLaglen's psychology, that everybody—himself included—loves a parade and that he is an incurable organizer, especially if he thinks the organizers are having a good time.

The company began five years ago when some former service men formed a club to ride once a week and hold reminiscent sessions about war days. Then they asked McLaglen to be their colonel and really organize it. As the Light Horse Troop membership zoomed, snappier uniforms were adopted, and the members' wives and girl friends began to want to join the fun.

Currently, the organization includes a motorcycle troop of 60, a drum and bugle corps of 62, an air corps of 40, two equestrienne troops of 70 each, and a men's riding group of 80. The ambulance corps was disbanded but a new unit, the American-Scots, is being organized with kilts for color and bagpipes to rival the motorcycles' roar. Everybody turns out for Rose Bowl parades and for dedications of this and that. Hollywood depends on the McLaglen gang and its military men.

Sunday shows at the nine-acre sports center, their proceeds given to charity, are a fine sight to see and hear—the motorcycles snorting, the band whamming out marches, and stunt riders putting their mounts through tricks for which they would get at least $16.50 of the movies' money on weekdays. Stars graciously appear as crowd-pullers and say how-do-you-do and sing from the grandstand's mike. Leo Carrillo, as guest announcer, usually does both, humming gay Spanish tunes interspersed with such acidities as "16 ounces make a pound, two McLaglens make a ton—ooops! Are you hurt?"

McLaglen always has delighted in the members enjoying the shows and meetings, and generally having a good time. There's too much discipline in it now to suit him; he'd rather have fun such as the time he hired Hollywood's prime ribber, Albert Morin, to review the troops. He rescued dapper little Morin just in time, after the bogus general had lectured the men on their inability to sit a saddle properly, salute decently or grace a uniform.

Hollywood Likes Parades

Hollywood likes the parades, too, looking on with mixed affection and amusement. It knows the former soldiers playing soldier have no more warlike intent than to reduce desk stomachs and have fun—much like the drill teams of the 'Nineties whose cotillions were more important than marksmanship records. A few years ago other actors had similar organizations; Lewis Stone headed a bunch of mounties, Gary Cooper's Hollywood Hussars included many of his old cowboy pals.

However, a local paper decided there must be some other motive and began to view with alarm. Dictatorship threatened, massed militarism was rife, and dire predictions were made of burly mounted troops riding pellmell down Hollywood boulevard clubbing innocent citizens. No actual harm was done to reputations, but Cooper's and Stone's companies disbanded and McLaglen's men grew sick and tired of being kidded about it. Even now, McLaglen says in dismay, "Don't mention it to my wife! She doesn't even want to hear 'parade.' "

Naturally, it was welcome balm to him when the American Legion Post presented him with an enormous silver trophy for outstanding citizenship. His business manager might say a dour "amen" to that. He is almost resigned to his client's charitable nature and listens wearily to McLaglen's laborious explanations that every new venture isn't going to cost a cent—it's all going to be self-supporting. He has bought countless uniforms and paid as many dues; two Christmases ago he footed the bill for 12,000 dinners and the sports center this year had a children's party that rocked the stadium. He is forever wheedling jobs for people and gets touched on every hand.

Organizes Child's Club

That's how he got embroiled in his latest organization. It will wear uniforms, too—size 8 to 14, with VMLKC in white letters plastered across a hundred little chests—and he snorts happily and fairly wriggles inside his big skin when he talks about it.

"The way it started," he said, "I stopped in for a bite at a place on Halloween and a bunch of kids grabbed me and started yelling, 'Trick or treat!' 'Aw, you wouldn't do that to me, would you?' I asked them. But they said, 'Oh, yes we would.' So I took 'em in and bought 'em ice cream and pop, and then one of the little girls said, 'Would you like us to sing for you?' Y'know, they could really sing," McLageln said earnestly. "And dance! Tsck! So I said, 'You ought to have a little club. Why don't you come to my house every Sunday? I've got a theater and you could have shows and meetings.'

"You know, they've already got $400 in the bank that they've earned all by themselves? Just from singing Christmas carols and little shows they write and give. Now they've got their mothers coming and they chip in from their bridge games. They've got a president and a treasurer—a treasurer, mind you!" he rocked with laughter. "You ought to see them inspecting new candidates. No professional children—most of them can't afford dancing and singing lessons.

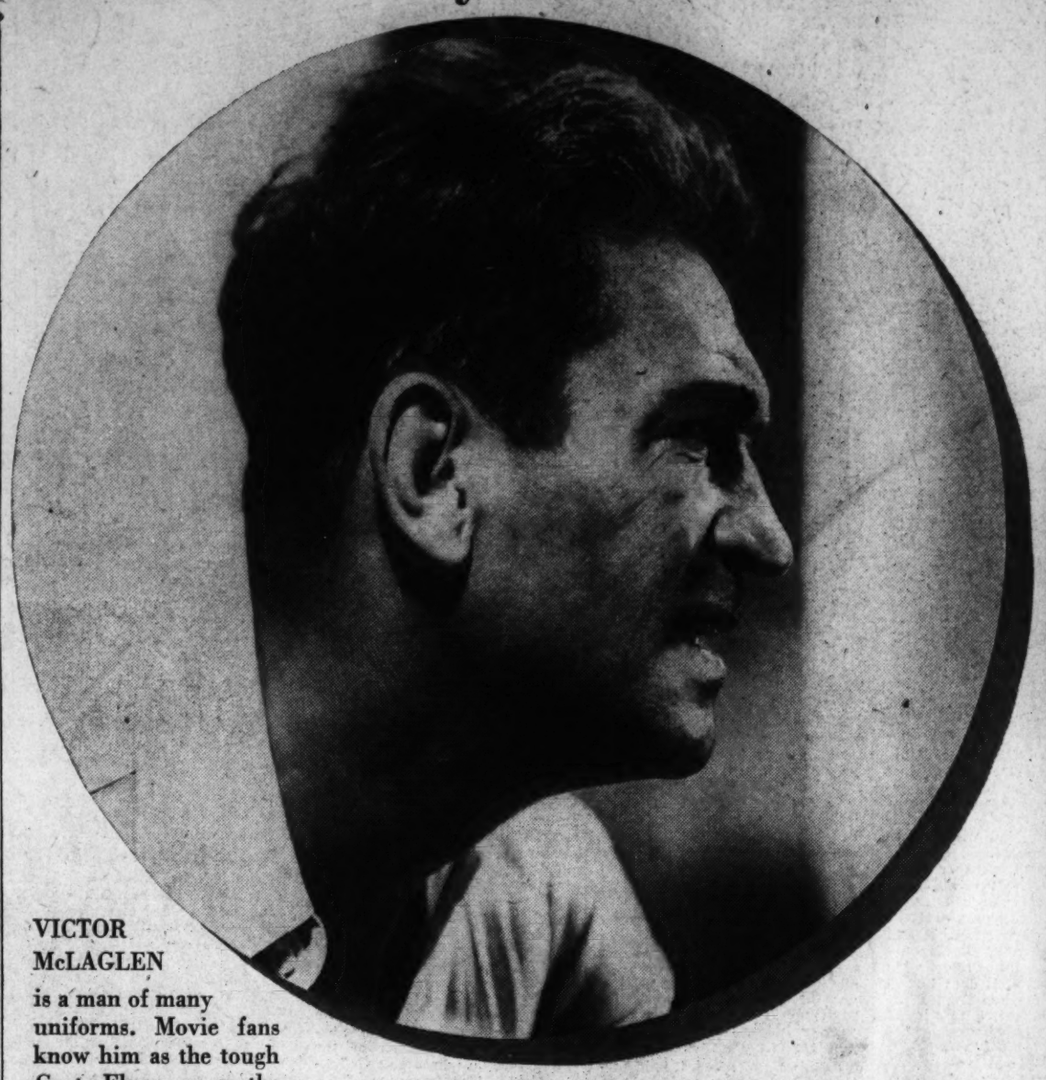
"And this summer we're all going over to Catalina for two weeks. On their own money, mind you." he lied fearfully, his business manager's spirit hovering over him. "They'll all wear little red sweaters and red bathing suits with VMLKC on them—that's for Victor McLaglen's Kids Club. I got that idea from the time I was provost marshal in Bagdad after the war. We needed porters but the Arabs weren't allowed on the docks where the supplies were. So I put some of them in red blouses with numbers on them, and you could pick out your porter a mile away. That's how we'll keep track of the kids on the beach this summer."

Has No Idle Days

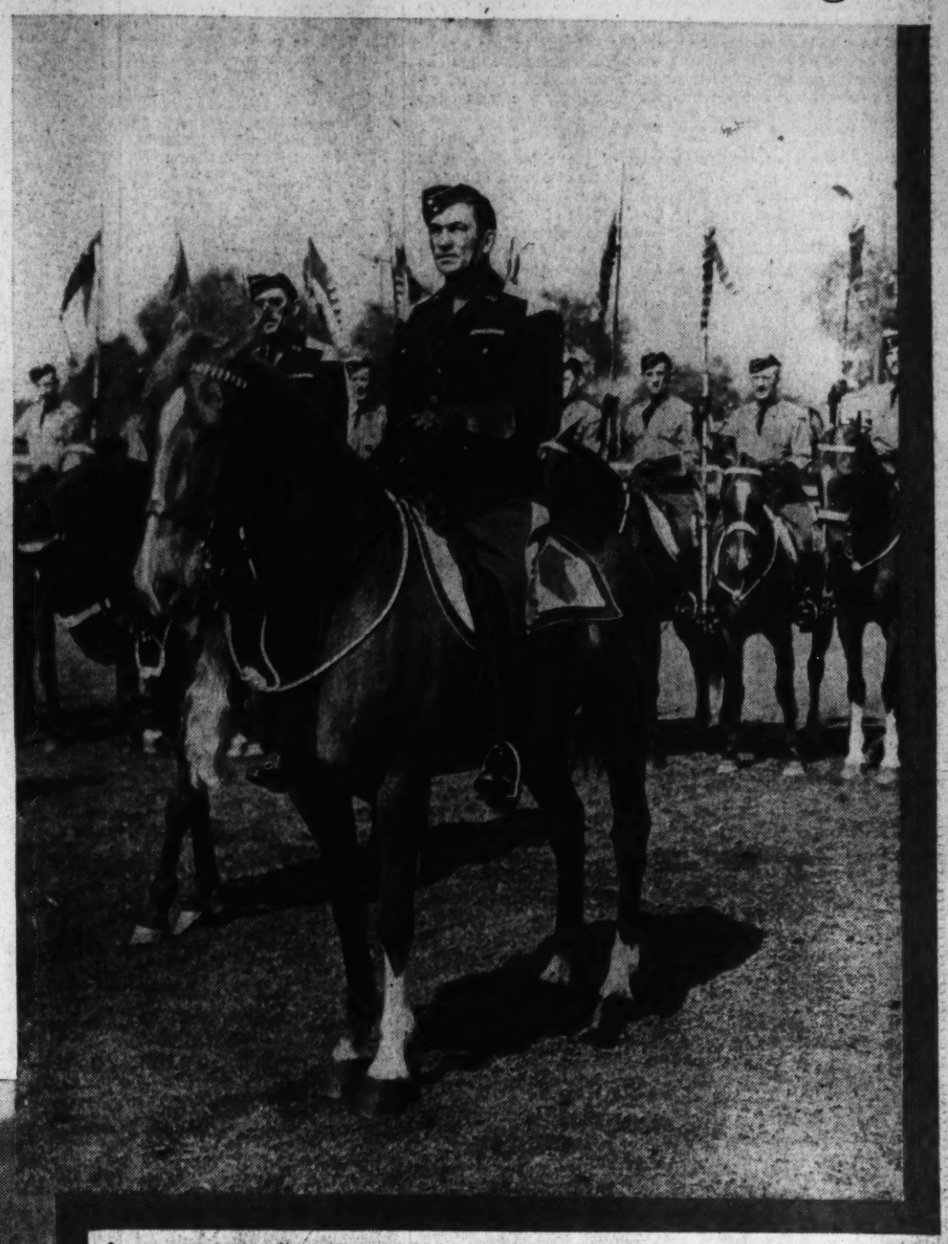
Between this new interest and working steadily in pictures, he hasn't as much time for the Light Horse Troop. Also the sports center was badly damaged by floods last year and repairs are being held up until a lawsuit is settled. Since he finished his Twentieth-Fox contract and began freelancing, he has not had an idle day. "Gunga Din" was a dish that exactly suited him.

He is proud of Sheila, the 16-year-old daughter who is an excellent horsewoman, like her mother. But his conversation, whatever the topic, is liberally sprinkled with "Andrew," of his boxing championships and relief that his son is not a jitterbug.

Also, it's pleasant to have somebody to whom he can look up. Andrew topping his father's 6 feet 3 by another three inches. Looking to a movie directorship some day, the boy doesn't haunt sets—school keeps him busy—but he does advise McLaglen with unexpectedly mature judgment on roles. He reads scripts, considers the director, the amount of footage his father will get and whether the character is fitting. Working in "Pacific Liner," McLaglen asked Chester Morris, just two days before the picture wound up, "Do you think this is going to be a good story?" "You ought to know," Morris said. "Me?" McLaglen asked in surprise. "I havent read it." That Andrew had, and approved it, was enough.



VICTOR McLAGLEN is a man of many uniforms. Movie fans know him as the tough Capt. Flagg, or as the British officer in "Gunga Din" (right). His neighbors in Hollywood know him as the man who organized the Light Horse Troop (far right) and the American-Scots, each with a distinctive uniform. And now he's at it again. This time he's planning children's camp uniforms



Movie Cartoon Business Wacky Too

By Richards Vidmer

Miami Beach, Fla.

Of course Lew Lehr always says that monkeys are the funniest people, but I'm beginning to wonder about that. Take the film folks, for instance.

Hamp Howard, who is connected with the motion picture industry, so resented a chance remark of mine that all picture people were wacky that he took me out to the Max Fleischer Studios in Coral Gables in order to prove that there was one branch of the business where everyone was sane and normal.

"It's entirely different with animated cartoons," he argued. "Nothing wacky at all. It's a regular business, conducted on business principles."

And when we went in to see Mr. Fleischer himself, I must confess that I was a bit disillusioned to find him sitting behind a flat-top desk which wasn't completely covered with telephones which he grabbed hysterically. There were a couple of phones and he did use them several times in the course of five minutes I was present, but he spoke in a quiet, calm, almost gentle voice and I was quickly becoming convinced that I had covered too much territory when I said the whole picture industry was balmy.

It seems that Mr. Fleischer is in the process of producing a seven-reel feature about Gulliver's travels, all in color and all animated cartoons. It will be ready for release in September. There are 400 artists working on the film and it will take 18 months to complete.

This all seemed very sensible in view of the success of Snow White and if I had gone no further I might have come away with apologies for my rather broad statement. But from there Hamp Howard took me into another studio where 10 or 12 men were bending over drawing boards.

Strange Faces

This of course would have been quite all right except that just as we entered one of the men looked up and made a face at me. His eyebrows went up in an expression of surprise, his lips formed a sudden circle, yet no sound came from his mouth. I must confess that I was somewhat startled. And looking about me I discovered that all the others seemed to be making faces too.

"What is this, the crazy house?" I whispered to my guide.

"No, they're just trying to get the proper expression on the faces of the people they are drawing," he replied with a laugh. "They aren't making faces at you. They all have mirrors in front of them and they have to see exactly how lips move and eyes focus when a character is talking."

Closer inspection revealed that they did have mirrors, but it still gave me the creeps to see a lot of grown men and women making faces at themselves. So we moved on.

In another room several people were playing with a cardboard village. They were putting up trees, standing away and looking them over and then seriously returning to their play and readjusting them.

"Overworked, eh?" I asked, as quietly as I could.

"Oh, no. They're fixing up the scenery for a three-dimension shot," said Mr. Howard, and I nodded as though I understood, but it still looked to me as though they were playing with paper dolls.

Sound Track

Next we went to a building where a picture was being run on a screen. It was about Aladdin's lamp and Popeye was playing the leading role. We sat down in the back, and whereas I was fairly amused by Popeye's antics I didn't see much sense in spending the entire afternoon watching it. After all I could have walked across the street if I had wanted to see a movie.

But suddenly my attention was attracted to four men standing behind a long table covered with gadgets. At first I had supposed they merely were watching the pictures, too, but suddenly one of them grabbed a bell and rang it. Then another rocked a cradle filled with coins. A third scraped two pieces of wood together, the fourth stood poised over a great drum, covered with elephant hide, an ax uplifted, and watched the picture tensely out of the corner of his eye. Finally the ax crashed down with a terrific sound. By this time the first one had a telephone book in his hands and was flipping the pages frantically.

"See," I said with a nod toward the four men. "That's what I meant when I said everybody was nog-groggy in pictures."

But again Mr. Howard merely laughed.

"They're making the sound effects for the picture," he said. "Where did you think all that noise was coming from?"

Reel Romance

Well, naturally, I thought it was coming from the screen, but as I watched more carefully I realized they were just putting the sound into the picture. But Popeye and Olive Oyl were talking; where did their voices come from?

"Over there behind the screen," I was told. "Jack Mercer is the voice of Popeye and Margie Hines the voice of Olive Oyl. They ran off and got married a couple of days ago."

"Aw, that's just a press agent's dream," I said. "You're making that up."

But it developed to be really on the level. However, the bar wasn't. When Mr. Howard suggested we go into the bar, it seemed to me to be about time and I was only too willing. When we got there it looked like any other bar and there were two or three men standing behind it filling orders.

"A dry martini," I said to one of them cheerily.

But everybody laughed at me. It was a paint bar. They mixed all kinds of paint behind it, but nothing alcoholic.

"Come on," I urged my guide. "Let's get out of here."

But we stopped by his office on the way and he introduced me to his very attractive secretary, a Miss Diseree Heaton. She said she was leaving on Friday.

"I'm going over to Sarasota," she said, "to become a bareback rider in the circus."

"You see everything is very normal in some parts of the motion picture industry," said Mr. Howard as we returned to our car and started back for the beach.

But I still wasn't convinced. Some queer things take place even when they are making animated cartoons.

Lane Sisters Share Advantages of Camera Angles

Hollywood (U.P.).—The Lane sisters, Rosemary, Priscilla and Lola, who are again working as a trio in a picture of American family life, have an agreement that is unusual in Hollywood.

The sisters have decided that they will rotate the advantages of camera position and lighting in each scene in which they appear as much as possible through photographic technique.

The sisters decided that this policy was best after they discovered that each appears to the best advantage when wearing some shade of blue. As it is impossible for the three to wear blue all the time, they agreed to rotate the favorable shade.

Vivacious, blonde Priscilla does better in a shade of light blue which is different from Rosemary's favorite shade, navy blue, while brunette Lola thinks that electric blue is her complementary shade.

This color scheme was worked out by the Lane girls when they last appeared together in "Four Daughters." And now that they are reunited in another family picture at Warner Bros., called "American Family," they are carrying the idea a few steps further.

In every shot that is filmed, one of the girls wears a frock, coat or accessories in blue. The other two take care that their colors will not clash with the blue, but will bring it out to best advantage.

It would be unwise for any studio official to try to change the plan they have evolved to divide the 'breaks," for the girls are determined that each shall receive equal advantages when all appear in a picture together.

This New York

By Lucius Beebe

That there is an element of stuffiness toward life in general about New York is undeniable and nothing serves so graphically to illustrate it as to encounter civic jollifications and recreations of the historic past in other cities throughout the land. The farther West one goes of course the gayer and gaudier the public festivals, and most of the visiting newspaper men who made safari on San Francisco for the opening of the exposition there had to admit that public hospitality as well as civic sense of humor in Manhattan compared unfavorably indeed with the lavishness and hurrah with which San Francisco revived the atmosphere of the old West and went about the promotion of the Golden Gate Fair. Can anyone imagine the whole city of New York giving itself over to the business of growing beards, getting into archaic costumes, calling off all pretense at serious business for five days and spending the interlude riding horseback in the streets, firing off revolvers and dragging strangers into the saloons for the most overwhelming sort of hospitality?

And while remarking on the capacity of the citizenry west of Chicago to have fun en masse, about the greatest rodeo week of history should be the one now jointly planned by the Union Pacific Railroad and Paramount Pictures for the first showing of Omaha in April of Cecil De Mille's "Union Pacific." Omaha is the logical setting for the premiers of the film both as the administrative headquarters of the railroad and as the starting point of the epic of westward construction of the overland road in '69. The Union Pacific's president, William M. Jeffers, is appropriating $50,000 to advertise the event with full-page insertions in such periodicals as Colliers, Life, Time, the Saturday Evening Post and Look, too, the Union Pacific is supplying Western costumes for 40,000 Omaha citizens, that the entire town will take on a frontier atmosphere for the occasion. For the first time since 1869 the board of directors of the Union Pacific will meet in Omaha instead of New York, and false fronts are to be erected along the streets by the municipality to lend a realistic touch of the old West. Mr. De Mille, accompanied by Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrae, Lynne Overman and other principals in the film, will be on hand, and the picture will be shown for the first time simultaneously in no fewer than three Omaha playhouses. There is to be a dinner for 6,000 leading townsfolk in the Ak-Sar-Ben Coliseum, and the whole countryside is going to be urged to laugh and play for two solid days of band playing, gunfire, parades and barbecues for the greater glory of Omaha and the Union Pacific. As a matter of historic record, Council Bluffs, across the river, was the original terminus of the railroad, and Council Bluffs asked timidly if it could please get in on the celebration, too. The Omaha city fathers lifted the toll across the river bridge, so that the neighbors could come in, but that's the limit. Nobody is going to steal Omaha's thunder.

The anecdote is going the rounds of the bar at the Racquet Club concerning the youth who attended an ushers' dinner last week and returned to his apartment somewhat the worse for what is whimsically known as wine. He tossed himself on his bed or hear it and his next waking recollection was of his man, Perkins, who had come in to arrange his clothes and get the master outside some bisodol. Recalling that at one stage of the evening he had contrived to spill the better part of a bottle of claret over his person, the playboy suggested that perhaps his dinner jacket had best be sent to the dry cleaners. "Yes, sir," said Perkins, without batting an eye, "and would you like it to go just as it is now, sir, or would you care to remove it from your person?"

BOULEVARD BACKCHAT: Dorothy Stote and her publishers, Stokes, celebrated the publication of her book, "Men Wear Clothes Too," with a promotion party at the Waldorf to which no men at all were invited. . . . Edward Hungerford is driving the William Crooks, the celebrated midnineteenth century locomotive, in from Chicago under her own power next week as a publicity gesture for his Railroads on Parade at the World's Fair. . . . The St. Cecilia Ball, much touted Charleston social fracas, is never reported in the local public prints. . . . Tom Waring attempted to chronicle the precious event in the New York manner in the News and Courier, but was sat upon by the local biggies for his pains. . . . What a curious civilization! . . . The best shop window display of the week is that at Roger Kent's, showing with photographs and original sketches by Raoul Pene Du Bois the costumes for "One for the Money" which were executed by—one guess—Roger Kent, and extremely handsome, too.

Charles B. Driscoll

Pages From a Journalist's Diary

New York.

I met Kyle Crichton on a train in the Middle West recently. We sat in a lounge car and discussed old times and new. A few years ago, Kyle came to New York from Texas, to take an editorial job on Scribner's Magazine. He immediately came to see me in my Times Square workshop. He had been reading a column I was then writing, which appeared in a Texas newspaper. He wanted to establish acquaintanceship with some folk from the prairies. He was just a bit lonesome for the long-horned cattle.

Crichton now holds down one of the best magazine jobs in New York. He is a staff man at Collier's, doing special assignments throughout the country. He writes a couple of pieces a month, travels in style, is well paid. Just another Texas boy who's made the city folk stare at his fast progress toward the top of the heap!

Another interesting person with whom I renewed acquaintanceship on the train is Wheeler MacMillan, big, slow-spoken, good-natured farmer from Ohio. He boarded our train at Chicago, and left it at Lima, Ohio, his old home town. He owns a farm there, raises hogs, chickens and corn. He also owns a farm near Hopewell, N. J., the town made famous by the Lindbergh residence, kidnaping, and the trial.

MacMillan and his family live on the Hopewell farm. He commutes to his office on Park avenue, when he is not traveling about the country. His chief interest is what's called the farm chemurgic movement. That's a scheme to find industrial uses for farm products.

"You see," he exlained to me, 'the people now in this country can't eat all we grow on our farms, and the population is not increasing. It's practically at a standstill. So we must find uses for farm products. Henry Ford and others have pioneered in making such things as automobile parts out of beans."

He told me of a visit with Ford at his big Southern plantation. "We will grow our motorcars yet," the industrialist told him. MacMillan saw experiments afoot that may mean much to farmers and others. For instance, spinning yarn out of beans.

MacMillan has had an office in Park avenue for a dozen years or more. But he has refused to live in the city. Since many suburban communities do not permit the keeping of hogs, he had to go a long way out for his residence. He suffers nostalgia when away from the "good clean smell of the pig-pens."

Travel, it seems to me, is something that practically every American desires. Not so with a great many others. I've met people in all parts of the world who were amazed by travel propensities of Americans.

Their own ambition in life was to make good, in a modest way, in their own neighborhoods, and to keep clear of foreign influences and customs.

In Kansas it used to be said that nobody could qualify as politician, editor or farmer unless he had been around the world. And, indeed, many of the most persistent travelers I've met have been from the interior of this continent.

I'm a note-taking, snapshotting tourist, and always take in the tourist sights first of all in strange places. I've found that such touring and sightseeing is made fun of only in England. The English like to poke wise cracks at American schoolteachers, who read their guidebooks, make notes, take pictures. Why should that be considered funny? The schoolteachers are getting the most out of their travel.

If you come to the World's Fair in New York, or attend the one in San Francisco, I recommend that you carry a camera and a notebook. Your travel diary will be interesting to you, and maybe to others, many years hence.

In lower Broadway, near the Battery, and in adjacent streets, flags of many shipping lines fly from staffs on roofs and sides of buildings. Here is the area in which you'll find offices of most of the lines whose ships plow the seven seas and all the oceans. The flags give the district a gala atmosphere. Always, the house flag of the line flies beside the American ensign.

Sign-Bored

For all the highway traveler knows, Spring may be just around the corner—of a sign board. That's the way it was in East Teabone until Archie Ditherton took his axe to the billboards and let the scenery through.

By WEARE HOLBROOK

YESTERDAY, as part of my avuncular duties, I took little Eustace for a walk in the country. We trudged diligently through suburban lanes, over rustic bridges and across open fields. The air was warm, and the unfrozen ground felt soft and resilient underfoot—but not soft and resilient enough. Presently I sat down to rest my aching dogs, while Eustace ran on ahead.

A few minutes later he came back all atwitter with exictement. "It won't be long now!" he cried exultantly. "Guess what I just saw."

"What?"

"The first sign of spring!"

"A robin?"

Robin my eye!" he retorted. "I said a sign. Come on and I'll show you."

Reluctantly I allowed myself to be led up to the crest of a small hill. Below us curved a peaceful country road, flanked on either side by large billboards.

Eustace pointed to a picture of a blonde nymph advertising bathing suits. "There!" he said triumphantly.

As we continued our jaunt we saw other signs of spring—posters proclaiming the virtues of bock beer, ice cream, sun-tan lotions, mosquito-killers, golf courses and vacation camps. Among the last-mentioned was a huge wooden board dedicated to Lake Pottiwatti Lodge (Swimming, Boating, Cottages—3 Mi. Ahead); it was decorated with a scene depicting Lake Pottiwatti in all its blue-green glory. Except for the obsence of gondolas, it resembled a mural in an Italian spaghetti house. And ironically enough, directly behind this meretricious masterpiece—and hidden by it—was a vista of natural beauty that transcended the best efforts of the commercial artist.

But little Eustace was not concerned with what lay beyond the billboards. Pussywillows on the bough, sap darkening the trunks of maple trees, wild geese flying northward — these perennial phenomena meant nothing to him. Eustace is a modern child, and literal-minded. When he says signs of spring, he means signs.

Shortly before his epoch-making discovery that life begins at forty, Dr. Walter B. Pitkin wrote a book entitled "The Art of Rapid Reading." His theory was that the eye could be trained to enlarge its reading scope; with practice, it could take in not single words or lines, but whole paragraphs at a glance.

This, as every newspaper reader knows, is true. It is also true that as the eye extends its scope, the mind unconsciously develops the faculty of selection—a sort of sixth sense that enables it automatically to accept or reject what the eye offers it. It does this in self-defense, to keep from being bogged down beneath a mass of gratuitous information.

And nowhere is this mental tuningout more useful than on a cross-country motor trip. The driver must watch the road, and also take in every marginal note along the roadside. He must read all the insistent admonitions to Drink This, Eat That, and Wear the Other—because among them lurk the modest clews that tell him whether or not he is traveling in the right direction. If the monitor in his mind does not bar out the blurbs, he is likely to wind up in some farmer's back yard—a helpless victim of high-pressure salesmanship.

In this era of speed, it is important to be able to snap up large chunks of verbiage quickly. However, it is equally important to keep the verbiage from cluttering up the brain cells, and the only way we can do this is to learn to read without comprehending. Perhaps Dr. Pitkin would be doing the world a service by writing a sequel entitled "The Art of Vapid Reading."

But until someone gives us a scientific treatise on the subject, the signboards along the roadside will serve very well as textbooks. That is, they will unless my friend Archie Ditherton goes on a nationwide rampage.

Archie Ditherton is one of the charter members of the East Teabone Country Club. When the club was organized, some fifteen years ago, its founders looked ahead. They considered not only the grounds but the approach to the grounds, and they selected a site at the end of a narrow winding road that led down the valley, across the Teabone River and up a wooded hillside. Half the pleasure of going out there—for a less-than-ardent golfer, at least—was the drive through the country.

Then, one by one, the billboards began to appear along the way. They seemed to spring up overnight, like large rectangular toadstools. You never saw them in the process of construction; but one day there would be the familiar glimpse of Teabone Falls as you turned to cross the bridge, and the next day the glimpse would be blotted out by a gigantic pink lady proudly displaying her freshly-scoured teeth. In the autumn, the maple leaves on the hillside paled to insignificance beside the ruddy cheeks of the poster people who drank Gadunka Tonic. The fragrance of the pine woods somehow lost its pungency in the presence of the blue-and-orange broadside advertising Sizzling Platters at Steve Pappadouka's.

Near the country-club entrance, screening the view of the golf course and the peaceful valley beyond, was a monstrous infant who said, "Give me some McPherson's Macerated Mushine, Mommy!" I used to hate that child. It was too pink and pinguid, and it had a greedy, pig-like face; I felt that if it did not die of apoplexy, it would grow up into one of those gourmets who bedevil headwaiters and make barnyard noises when they eat.

But the other afternoon, on leaving the country club, I noticed that this repulsive infant was no longer in its accustomed place. Only a heap of painted kindling wood marked the spot where it had stood, and there was an unobstructed view of the valley.

As I drive on, I passed a lithographed lady who announced boastfully that she had "no more headaches." But now she not only had no more headaches; she had no more head. Somebody had bashed it in. You could see blue sky where her face used to be.

Farther along the road lay the remains of other advertising signs. And across the bridge, I came upon a car parked at the edge of the roadway. It was Archie Ditherton's car, and Archie was beside it. He also seemed to be beside himself—for he wielded an ax with insane fury, and at each stroke of the glittering blade a large chunk of a Satisfied Chewer of Old Overshoe Cut Plug bit the dust. Yet his face was perfectly calm when he turned to greet me.

"Hullo there!" he called cheerily, pausing to rest on his trusty ax. Though flushed by his exertions, he had no maniacal gleam in his eye.

"What's the big idea?" I asked.

Archie Ditheron yawned. "Oh, I just got bored," he explained.

"Bored?" I echoed, puzzled.

"Yes," said Archie, taking another whack at the Satisfied Chewer of Old Overshoe Cut Plug. "Sign-bored to destruction!"

Dale Carnegie Says—

The other afternoon I sat in a small assembly room in the Railroad Y. M. C. A., on East Forty-seventh street, New York, and saw something remarkable. I saw 70 men filled with an extraordinary and laudable desire, a desire not to help themselves, but to help each other! Yes actually to help the other fellow! The Golden Rule! In action! On Forty-seventh street!

It was a regular weekly meeting of "The Forty Plus Club of New York." The purpose of this club is to help eradicate an idea that has gained a foothold in this country. And that is that the man of 40 or more is old and decrepit, hobbling toward the grave, and useless for industry. These men don't sit around and twiddle their thumbs and complain, "Oh my, it's too bad that employers have such thoughts." No, indeed. They go out and call on employers and persuade them to give older men a chance. And they have the men right there in the Forty Plus Club of New York to back what they say.

The men are hand-picked. All are former executives who have earned $4,000 a year or more, and who are now out of work for one reason or another.

They showed me the constitution, and I copied this from it:

"The chief purpose of this club is to encourage, inspire and assist unemployed executives of 40 or over."

The club has no dues. Doesn't cost a cent to join it. It doesn't want a thing in the world from its members. On the other hand, it tries to give them help and encouragement while finding jobs for them.

If you live in the New York area, and if as an executive you have earned $4,000 a year or over and can substantiate this, then you are open to membership. The club has several officers, but the one I talked to longest was Henry Hay. You can write to him in care of the address I gave in the first paragraph. These officers are all men who are executives in different business firms, but who give up their time to helping men over 40. They do not get a cent of pay. In fact, no one connected with the club draws a single penny. Their sole purpose is not to grab, but to give.

You can profit from this club even if you do not live in the New York area, for plans are now being worked out to have this club flung across the United States. This will mean that many other unselfish, helpful men will have to give up their time to organizing and establishing branches. You may want to join in this movement. Better still you may want to start a similar organization in your own community. It doesn't matter whether you are employed or not; the object is to get workers who are willing to help the other man.

The Funny Shirt Problem

By H. I. Phillips.

Dear Ed: What to do about the Nazi bund in this country becomes more and more the question of the hour, and I think if you give the bund rope enough it will hang itself. Although it would probably first take the rope and try to make a new kind of shirt out of it.

It is the American way to give all minorities freedom of speech, even though it seems that we carry the idea too far in some cases. I suppose nothing would please the bund more than to stir up a lot of opposition and keep on the front page. It might be the best idea to ignore the bund, but there will probably have to be a showdown in time.

What to do is the problem. Uncle Sam can't start by telling any faction that it can't wear funny uniforms, shirts, caps, belts, boots or jerseys because climbing into funny apparel is an old American custom. Every association, lodge or order in the country has some kind of outlandish regalia, and we will get into a mess if we limit styles in queer clothes. We can't forbid the bund to shout itself hoarse because we guarantee free speech, and every American with a message regards it as his privilege to leap onto a soap box and shoot his mouth off. It is okay for him to hire Madison Square Garden or the Yankee Stadium, too, if he so desires, because one of this country's oldest retorts to the fellow with leaping tonsil trouble is, "Aw, go hire a hall!"

But there is something about the manner of these bund leaders that particularly rubs the American fur the wrong way. I am not half so offended by the Communists as I am by the bund boys, and I guess it must be due to the fact that Germans have been so much a part of American life, and German-Americans have in the main seemed such likeable, friendly, good-natured people.

There have always been German-American organizations in this country and every community has had a bunch of 'em, like the Harugari Singing Society and and turnvereins and the scheutzenfest clubs, but the members were a rollicking, good-natured, song-loving bunch who liked to drink beer, sing good old German songs, hold field days, plan picnics and have a jolly good time all around.

The German saloons back home were as a rule the most heartwarming places. The proprietor was apt to be a former Prussian soldier who still thought the German army the greatest on earth and liked to tell you so, but he said it with a smile, and any argument you got into was soon drowned out by a bunch of Germans at a round table suddenly bursting into "Old Heidelberg" or "It's Always Fair Weather."

You wouldn't hesitate to dash into the street and join a passing parade of German-Americans because you knew they were out for a lark and that even the arguments would be good-natured and amusing. You never thought of these Germans attacking America, trying to undermine it or having the remotest idea of wanting to change the American system. They were strong for the American system. Most of 'em had found great happiness and prosperity in America and when they cried over their schnapps about the glories of Germany you knew it was just so much sentimental bosh.

But the Nazi bunders are something else again. I question whether they know how to sing. Even if they can sing, I think they would regard it as undignified an not in keeping with the spirit of present-day Germany. I cannot imagine them joking or laughing. If you threw a bunch of 'em in to an old-time Harugari Society meeting they would look like wild men from Borneo, and the Harugari boys would toss them through the window without even offering them a seidel of pilsner.

The Germans-Americans of yesterday were not very strong on uniforms. They had had plenty of that at home and they gloried in plain business suits with loud Weber and Fields vests.

But what a difference today! What a truculent, heel-clicking, noise-making, desk-thumping crowd these bund boys are! They put on warlike uniforms, even for regular business meetings, and they give the Hitler salute in exchanging the time of day. I always thought, and I think I was right, that the old-time German-American deeply venerated the American flag, and I am sure it was not in his heart to hold a mass meeting on Washington's Birthday, stand on a platform draped with Old Glory and then proceed to denounce American Government officials and the American way of doing things.

If these modern-day bund boys had staged one of their demonstrations in America 25 year ago, the German-Americans of the community would have given them the bum's rush without any outside assistance. And then they would have washed their hands, rolled in another keg of beer, and started singing. That was their strong pofnt, song.

Of course a lot of German-Aamerican of today are in the bund and boosting it heart and soul, but I am sure that the mass of Germans in this country are against it and would like to take a bund starter and use it on the nearest Nazi leader with both hands.

These bundsters would offend anybody except fellow members and, even at that, I guess they must do a lot of fighting among themselves. I do not think they are going anywhere in this country, although they are well dressed for it.

And I think they can count most of our German-Americans among their worst enemies.

Yours in a lather,

ELMER TWITCHELL.

Twenty-five years ago the German-Americans would have given them the bum's rush without any outside assistance

Hispanic Folk Culture One of Sturdiest in U. S.

This is the fourth in a series of articles on the background of the sixth annual National Folk Festival, to be held April 27, 28 and 29 at Constitution Hall. Dr. Boggs is associate professor of Spanish at the University of North Carolina, author of "Index of the Spanish Folk Tales" and contributor to the Journal of American Folklore, the Folklore Fellows Communications and the Southern Folklore Quarterly.

Next Sunday's article, dealing with Indian music, will be contributed by Frances Densmore, of the Smithsonian Institution.

By Ralph Steele Boggs.

In treating a topic so susceptible to racial prejudice, let me first affirm the impartiality of my position. My ancestors came to the United States many generations ago, chiefly from Ireland, England and Germany. So far as I am aware, there is no Spanish blood in my veins. I am neither Catholic nor Jew, rightist or leftist, nor do I have any subsidy nor sponsor any "ism" except a typical, somewhat passive Americanism.

R. S. BOGGS

Indian folk life, the real American folk life in this country before the white men came, has been a minor influence on our contemporary folk. Indian blood mingled relatively little with ours, relatively few Indian words have found their way into our language, and Indian life has modified but little the patterns of ours.

The ballads we sing, the tales and riddles we recite, the games we play, the customs we follow and the festivals we observe are few hundred thousand Indians remaining in our land, indeed, only by conscious effort preserve their own folk traditions today.

So our contemporary folk culture is not a purely native growth, nor even a modified native growth, but a rather complete and complex transplantation. Its growth on New World soil is naturally slow because, weakened by transplantation, it must gradually take root in its new soil and adapt itself to its new environment. Also its growth has been retarded because it is not a simple transplantation from England but a complex one from many different lands. It takes a long time for so many and such diverse culture traditions to fuse and develop as a unified entity with characteristic traits of its own.

A notable trait of our folk culture today is its "mixture" quality. The superpatriots who would prove our folk unity and uniqueness are forced in their zeal to magnify a particular phase of our folk culture which really already had a unity and character of its own before it ever crossed the Atlantic, like the English ballad tradition, and to ignore other important unassimilated phases, like the Pennsylvania German or Louisiana French. Or they magnify the tender shoots of genuine new native growth, like John Henry and Paul Bunyan, to make them seem like mature trees as huge as those felled by Paul Bunyan himself.

Let us face the facts. Our folk culture has been transplanted and has taken root. Its growth is already discernible. But it is still young. Various other cultural stems are still plainly visible as they entwine with the English stem, fusing but not yet fused. In all the maze of New World transplantations the two sturdiest stems are easily identified—those of Hispania and Britannia.

In many ways, the New World presents a cultural picture as a whole, of which our country is only a part. Indian folk culture has disappeared in many places. Often it has fused with the new cultures. In isolated spots it still survives relatively pure. Cultural transplantations began in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries from Europe and are still continuing. Negro and other cultural stocks were later transplanted in many places. Forces of fusion and growth are now in an active stage.

Noted Diseuse Abandons Una-Drama to Appear at Head of Cast in Famed Shavian Play

Shaw's "Candida" Introduces Star With First Living Support

Miss Skinner Appears Here in Famous Role At the National Theater Tomorrow Night; Orson Welles Turns Tables on Cinema

By Nelson B. Bell.

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER, at long last, as the kingly saying is, is fulfilling the hopes of her distinguished father, Otis Skinner, dean of the American theater.

In bringing her new production of George Bernard Shaw's celebrated play of "Candida" to the stage of the National Theater tomorrow night, Miss Skinner is making her first appearance in the National Capital as a star supported by a full company of living actors. It was in the early days of her brilliant career as the supreme native exponent of the character sketch and the una-drama that her father expressed the view to Washington friends that his daughter "belonged to the legitimate theater." Miss Skinner, however, was dissatisfied, as she had every right to be in the light of subsequent events, with secondary roles and so pursued her unique form of entertainment and developed the one-actress drama to the level of an art that no other diseuse ever has been able to approach. But we will come back to that later.

BELL

Born in Chicago, educated at the Baldwin School and later at Bryn Mawr, Cornelia Otis Skinner left the halls of scholastic learning to go abroad for further study. In Paris she was associated with Dehelly and Jean Hevre, of the Comedie Francais, and attended lectures at the Sorbonne. She was a student of Jacques Copeau's school at his Theatre du Vieux Colombier where, in contrast to the classical training of the Comedie, she studied modern acting.

After her return to the United States, it was only natural that she should make her professional debut with her father, which she did in his production of Ibanez' "Blood and Sand," at the Empire Theater, in New York. She also appeared in "White Collars," "In His Arms," "In the Next Room," "The Wild Westcotts" and "Will Sheakespeare." None of her roles in these plays afforded the young actress the opportuniyt she sought. So we come around again to the topic of her amazing command of that unique form of complete and satisfying drama that employs the services of only one actress.

Began as an Entertainer of Her Friends

WITH THE BACKGROUND of experience she had gained in the living theater Miss Skinner devised the first of her character sketches in which she acted first for her friends and later professionally. It will be recalled by those whose memories need go back only a few years in the theater that Washington, at first, was a one night stand on Miss Skinner's itinerary. It was at that juncture in her career that her father avowed his conviction that her place was on the boards he had trod with such illustrious success for so many years.

But Miss Skinner still had unique ambitions to fulfill. Seeking new spheres and adventuring into them boldly, she wrote and acted "The Wives of Henry VIII" as the first of the amazingly vivid solo-dramas that brought such luster to her name. It was presented first in London and immediately duplicated its success in England on this side.

This was followed by "The Empress Eugenie" and "The Loves of Charles II," but still the young actress was not content and continued to seek wider fields for the expression of a talent that has never been matched in its distinctive exposition of a complete and rounded drama through the versatile and incomparably flexible talents of a single artiste. The highest reaches of this form of individualized and exclusive dramaturgy were attained in "Mansion on the Hudson" and "Edna His Wife," the most recent of her own creations in which Miss Skinner has been seen on the stage.

With the gradual perfection of her distinctly personalized form of dramatic expression, Miss Skinner became a unique figure in the history of the theater in America. One-night stands grew into week-stands, with the usual matinees, and crowds flocked to see the richly endowed artiste who could people a stage with a full cast of characters when only she herself was present. Washington, happily, was included in this expansion of her efforts.

It must have required greater courage and a wider indulgence of the adventurous spirit for Miss Skinner to relinquish, even for one season, the art she brought single-handed to highest fulfillment than it did to launch herself originally upon a career that proved so rich in profit to the playhouse.

Is Surrounded by a Notable Cast

WITH MISS SKINNER in the production of "Candida" are several players whose presence in the cast is worthy of note.

There is, for example, Dorothy Sands, in the role of Prossy, who, herself, is an artiste whose character sketches have not been without deserved renown. Then there is Onslow Stevens, as Morell, who brings to the National a reputation that is equally impressive to those who are familiar with the cinema and those whose allegiance remains true to the parent theater. And it does not end there.

In the role of Marchbanks will be found John Cromwell, an actor-director whose record is one of unusual achievement. By veterans of the theater, Mr. Cromwell perhaps will best be remembered for his vivid work as a member of the cast of "The Racket," a play that engaged the fascinated interest of Broadway throughout the course of a long run. But that is not the only stage hit with which Mr. Cromwell's name has been associated. He directed plays for William A. Brady over a period of 12 years and in 1933 branched out on his own and both produced and directed "Tarnish." This was closely followed by "Plucky Sam McCarver" and "The Silver Cord," both Sidney Howard plays. He also produced and directed "Women Go On Forever" and "The Queen's Husband."

Mr. Cromwell's fame in the celluloids is no less noteworthy. His first screen appearance was in the film version of "The Dummy," the comedy-drama in which Ernest Truex scored one of his greatest stage successes. Since then the number of his film successes—as director, rather than actor—has been so great that their recitation here is out of the question. As a reminder, however, it still might be pertinent to cite some of his outstanding hits. Such a roster would include "Burlesque," "Dance of Life," "Tom Sawyer," "The Texan," "Street of Chance," "Seven Days Leave," "Hell's Highway," "The Silver Cord," "Ann Vickers," "Spitfire," "Of Human Bondage," "Jalna," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Banjo on My Knee," "To Mary, With Love," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and so on and so on. I told you the list was too long.

To bring the matter thoroughly down to date, it was John Cromwell who directed "Made for Each Other," the current attraction on the screen at Lowe's Palace Theater, co-starring Carole Lombard and James Stewart. So now you know.

Orson Welles Reverses a Familiar Process

AS WAS POINTED OUT in daily columns last week, Orson Welles has reversed a process that has come to be taken as a matter of course in the contemporary theater.

When a stage play is photographed in something closely approximating the form in which it was originally written for the boards it is accepted without quibble as a motion picture, as in the cases of such screen releases as "Winterset," "Dead End," "Stage Door" and numerous other gelatins that were accepted as "pictures," when, as a matter of fact, they were merely photographic recordings of stage works that partook who deserts her una-dramas and character sketches, for the time being, to appear in the stellar role of George Bernard Shaw's "Candida," on the stage of the National Theater for the week beginning tomorrow night. On a Noble New Play and a Notable Revival

There are times when it strikes me that one charge which might be brought against the New York dramatic critics with considerable justice is the fairly handsome one that they demand perfection. Often given to tolerance and amiability, there are other moments when they—or perhaps I should say, we—grow impatient and demanding and reveal scant sympathy for a good try.

At least in no other way can I account for the somewhat cold reception bestowed upon "Family Portrait," the colloquial story of the life of Christ as seen through the eyes of His puzzled family. I thing it is pretty fine of us to have high standards, but I fear that in the case of "Family Portrait" they lead us to a rather cavalier treatment of a drama that possesses genuine merit and considerable nobility despite its unfortunate defects.

If only for the beautiful performance of Miss Judith Anderson in the leading role it would be a play worth any one's attention. If only for the fact that its authors, Miss Lenore Coffee and William Joyce Cowen, reveal so much dramatic imagination in a day when so few new playwrights show any at all, it deserves sympathetic consideration. I don't think it is quite fair of them to say that they should have written their play perfectly or not at all.

Lacks Eloquence

The chief imperfection of "Family Portrait" is simple to set down, it not easy to do anything about. It lacks the eloquence needed for the nobility of its theme. Its writing is simple, straightforward and honest, but pedestrian; it stays humbly on the ground when it should soar boldly. Clearly there are other flaws, too.

It is the scheme of the drama to attempt a feat not unlike that of the legendary case of "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out. Christ does not appear; his life is dramatized through the words and actions of His family, His associates and those who have listened to His words. This gives something of the quality of a stunt to a work that is too honest and reverent for any such condemnatory label, but I do not think that the absence of the central character is by any means serious, so skillfully do the authors get around it. In truth, the skill with which they take advantage of the limitations of their dramatic scheme is decidedly commendable.

More important is the fact that, while the play is concerned with the lack of understanding that a family has for a genius in its midst, it rarely seems as pointed in its ideas as it might have been.

Story De-Racialized

In the end, the only real trouble with the play is that failure to be properly eloquent. The Irish and the Jews seem to be the only races left that possess real eloquence, and so I cannot help wishing that either Paul Vincent Carroll or Clifford Odets had first come upon the idea of "Family Portrait." Employing exactly the scenario that Miss Coffee and Mr. Cowen used, either of them could have made an entirely brilliant play out of it by the mere fact of their talent for singing colloquial prose.

The authors of "Family Portrait" have de-racialized their story and have given it a vaguely contemporary setting, with the result that it impressively reminds us that Christ might just as well have been done to death in our savgae and unheeding modern world as in the faraway Palestine of a distant century. Carroll obviously would have made Him an Irish advocate of a liberal christianity, and Odets would have given Him the qualities of a social radical, but it seems to me that either treatment would have been made moving and magnificently effective without destroying any of the drama's grandeur of soul. For "Family Portrait" is concerned with the humanity and tragedy of Jesus, not with matters of mystical theology.

Worth Bothering About

By now almost every one who reads about the theater must have heard of the enormous impressiveness of the scene in which an eager young disciple of Christ who has delighted His mother by his loyalty to her Son tells her his name. It is, he says, "Judas—Judas Iscariot."

It is, of course, a "trick" episode that belongs to a De Maupassant or an O. Henry rather than to a Shakespeare, but it is tremendously exciting and imaginatively stimulating and it belongs among the memorable incidents of the modern theater.

You must admire, too, the technical dexterity with which the authors skirt the mystical and miraculous implications of their story. Chiefly, though, you should admire the play for its simplicity, directness and imagination, its moments of moving beauty and the almost incredibly lovely portrayal of Mary by Miss Anderson. Here is a performance so beautiful that it transcends mere acting skill and becomes a triumph of the spirit. "Family Portrait" is another American drama worth bothering about.

A Notable Revival

When I first saw Mr. Odets' "Awake and Sing" back in the days when I was a harried film critic finding surcease in the drama I realized it was a play of exceptional merit, but I confess that I didn't know how brilliant it really was until I encountered it in the current revival that the Group Theater is wisely giving it.

Although I miss that brilliant young actor Jules—or, as Hollywood insists on calling him, "John"—Garfield from this company and find the Miss Adler of the present edition a trifleless satisfactory than her sister of the original cast, the new production seems more forceful and understanding than the earlier one, and it brings out the author's virtues even more impressively.

Particularly are Morris Carnovsky, as the tragic father, and Luther Adler, as the sardonic ex-soldier, more expert in their parts than they were originally, which is high praise, since theirs were two of the memorable performances of the recent theater. Both of them are exceptionally talented actors, and as for Mr. Carnovsky, I do not think that there is a finer player on the American stage. As for the other members of the cast, they are extremely helpful to the play—in particular Miss Phoebe Brand, who is not usually given the credit she deserves as an actress.

Is Odets' Finest

Clearly, "Awake and Sing" is the finest of Mr. Odets' plays, and before we criticize him for not improving on it with "Paradise Lost" or "Golden Boy" or "Rocket to the Moon" we should remember that his first full-length drama was one of the most moving and distinguished works in the entire modern theater.

If Mr. Odets hasn't written anything better since then, it is worth noting that no one else has either.

"Awake and Sing" is an authentic masterpiece. It is not a "promising" play but one of rich achievement. Bitter, brooding, sardonic, humorous and tragic, realistic and yet filled with singing prose, savage and yet filled with a strange sort of embarrassed compassion, it is so stirring a drama that, among other things, it justifies the entire Left Wing movement in the theater.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 18.—There's no such thing as a star who is "poison" at the box-office. All any talented actress needs, W. A. Brady, pioneer theatrical producer, opines, is a good play. Katharine Hepburn is a specific case in point. Katy couldn't get a job in motion pictures, as we all know.

LOUELLA PARSONS

"Miss Hepburn was a flop in 'The Lake,' but she is such a success in 'The Philadelphia Story' that it will become a legend of the stage. I believe," said Mr. Brady, "that Miss Hepburn deserves the praise of every theatrical man and woman in the country for her bravery in returning to the stage."

I could have mentioned that Harry Cohn had given Katy a chance to score in "Holiday" (which didn't make a nickel at the box-office) after "The Lake," but "Bill" was so sold on his theory that all any actress needs is a good play, that I didn't say a word. Alice Brady's father went on to talk about Fredric March. "He's my idea of a real sport. Moreover, he is a young man with excellent judgment. He realized 'Your Obedient Servant' was a bad play and rather than have people pay their good money into the box-office because they wanted to see a movie star, he closed the show after a very short run. He called himself a 'goop' in the newspapers and that made a great hit with every Broadway producer as well as the public."

But March wasn't beaten. He accepted the role in "The American Way," which is now, as you know, a terrific sensation. Speaking of "The American Way," Mr. Brady told me that over $100,000 was raised in 24 hours to finance the play.

"That doesn't look as if Broadway were broke, does it?" he asked. "None of that money belongs to Freddie March," he told me. "He didn't put anything into the new play—perhaps because a burnt child dreads the fire and he lost plenty in 'Your Obedient Servant.'"

Tallulah Bankhead, although not of the films, has had a lot of bad luck in plays. She had one failure after another until "The Little Foxes," which is a tremendous hit.

"Broadway and Hollywood," W. A. says, "should really get together and then prices for plays wouldn't be so prohibitive. They fight each other, which is bad business. Of course, Hollywood has all the best of the story situation. Broadway has to accept a play as it is written without changing it while motion pictures can take it and rewrite it to suit the public taste."

"Dark Victory" was rewritten. Even "You Can't Take It with You," by such a fine playwriting team as George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, had many added scenes.

"There are about ten top playwrights in New York," Mr. Brady says, "and not one of these men will permit any of their plays to be changed. If we could change them, perhaps we would have more Broadway successes."

Perhaps this younger generation isn't as familiar with Alice Brady's father, who organized the world film plays and made some of the great successes of film and stage 20 years ago. But he is a man who all his life has said what is in his mind. He has made enemies, of course. Such a frank person as that is bound to, but I will say for him that he has never yet been motivated by selfish causes. He has had his say on things he has thought were right. He says now that Broadway is as much in need of plays as is Hollywood, so he is reading manuscripts that are sent to him with the hope that he may, as he has in the past, discover new playwrights. If he is able to do it he will be doing a service not only for himself but for the movies.

While here Mr. Brady will try to take some of the movie stars back to Broadway.

"I have heard it said," he told me, "that Bette Davis, Paul Muni and others would like to go on the stage if they could return to Hollywood in eight weeks. Well, I am here to offer any of them an eight weeks' engagement and, as you know, a hit on Broadway has never hurt any one."

Chinese Group in Benefit

The youth of modern China and the art of the ancient land will unite to bring aid to war sufferers in that ravaged country when "An Evening in Cathay" is presented at the Belasco Theater next Wednesday evening.

The performers are members of the younger intellectual set of Shanghai and the material they will offer includes folk songs and music as well as dance and drama.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt heads the list of patrons, which also includes Dr. Hu Shih, the Chinese Ambassador, and the Speaker of the House and Mrs. William B. Bankhead. Tickets are priced from 50 cents to $5 and are on sale at the Belasco, the A. A. A., and at Mrs. Dorsey's bureau in Droop's, 1300 G street.

The leader of the company is Mrs. Ernest S. H. Tong, wife of the counselor of the Kwangtung provincial government and prominent in amateur theatricals in Shanghai.

When plans were made for this trip to America, Mei Lan-fang, the eminent Chinese actor, who is well-known in this country, designed the elaborate costumes and aided the group in forming the repertoire.

Miss Virginia Chang, daughter of the former Chinese minister to Chile, is one of the leading performers, her most popular number being the amusing "Drunken Queen Dance."

Public, Not Build-Up, Is Real Star-Maker

Hollywood, Calif., March 18.—When you hear about a producer who picks an unknown girl from the extra ranks, from behind a candy counter or a manicure table and, by adroit publicity methods, makes her a star overnight, 90 per cent of that is a lot of hooey. With a capital "H."

HOPPER

Producers have all tried it, and where are those stars today? Producers don't make stars. The public is the great star-maker. And your verdict is the only one that counts. Your quarters, nickels and dimes are the votes which decide that so-and-so up on that screen should be a star.

The outstanding example of a studio build-up, which the public tossed right back into the producer's lap, to use a figure of speech, was Simone Simon, pronounced See-moan See-moan. And we've been listening to the moans from Westwood Hills ever since.

Mr. Zanuck was determined that Simone was going to be an American box-office sensation. He wanted her presented hot. So he ordered his bright boys to turn on the heat. In a few weeks Simone was America's most widely discussed person.

When she finally did get down to studying our language, after five engagements had been made and broken with one of our best teachers, the sixth appointment was kept, and Simone was kept waiting half an hour. That gave the little lady some respect for her teacher.

In that first picture, "Girls' Dormitory," they gave Simone Herbert Marshall, Ruth Chatterton, Constance Collier and a boy they thought so little of they never even put his name on the screen or program. But the public saw the youth walk in and wanted to know about him. He was Tyrone Power.

Simone Simon gave out with a pout, nothing more. But Zanuck must have figured he had a provocative personality who needed a little more attention. So he went right on presenting her in "Ladies in Love," "Seventh Heaven," "Love and Hisses." What an appropriate title.

So, after a famous lawsuit, gold keys, high-diddle-diddle and what not, she was taken down to the docks and quietly shipped home.

Let's pass on to Deanna Durbin, the perfect example of the public-made star. Deanna, who's the meal ticket of an entire studio, was dropped from Metro because they saw no box office in the sweet faced adolescent, whose only talent was singing.

But, after she appeared in "Three Smart Girls," Mr. and Mrs. John Public cried for more. Now they're fighting to keep her an adolescent and don't wnat her to bloom into womanhood. Deanna belongs to the public, but I'm afraid nature's one up on them this time.

Gable was a public-made star. Nine years ago he did a Western called, "The Painted Desert." No producer leaped from hiding to wave a contract under his nose. He played reporters, heavies and gangsters. But the public eye was on him. There was something about Gable that made him stand out (and I don't mean his ears—he's laughed more about them than you have) in even the smallest role—like a lottery ticket in a parson's purse.

When stars like Joan Crawford, Norma Shearer and Claudette Colbert started clamoring for him, the studio saw the light.

Let's stop, look and listen to the public—it hasn't let us down yet.

Broadway Chaff

By LEONARD LYONS

Gregory Ratoff won $200 from Sam Pokrass, the song writer who wrote the dream ballet for the new Shirley Temple picture, "The Little Princess." Pokrass had wagered that Zanuck would not renew his—Sam's—option . . . Champ Segal, who was tried for mutiny as a result of that Countess de Frasso cruise some weeks ago, received a wire from the trainer of his horses: "Need money to feed the horses." Segal, facing a mutiny charge, wired back: "Put 'em on a diet" . . . Somerset Maugham, who visited here last week, always has insisted that he does whatever he likes to do and disregards everything else. George S. Kaufman, who was Maugham's bridge partner and therefore was a heavy loser, heard this assertion, and asked: "Do you WANT to play bridge poorly?"

LYONS

Jack Skirball, vice president of Grand National Films, is having difficulties in casting . . . Two writers who brought their scenarios to him offered to solve that problem. "Now, in our story that's no problem," they suggested. "You can just imagine Clark Gable telling Myrna Loy that" . . . "Wait a minute," Skirball explained. "I want a story where Donald Wood tells Fay Wray."

Mrs. Harold Ross, wife of the editor of the New Yorker, once bought 100 shares of stock in a printing company . . . The Securities and Exchange Commission insisted that he come to its New York office and testify about those shares. Ross explained that he was willing to testify, but in his own office. A process server arrived to subpena Ross or his secretary. Both were absent, and so the receptionist was subpenaed . . . She described Ross' hours, how he looked—that he wore no derby nor carrie da cane, etc. . . . From then on Ross wore a derby and carried a cane—until his broker intervened . . . Ross now harbors no resentment against the SEC. Because last Saturday the office of Bill Douglas, head of the SEC, phoned an apology from Washington . . . What pleased Ross was that the phone call came in the middle of the broadcast of the President's speech.

DARRYL ZANUCK: Maybe you can make a movie out of this: Some years ago Charles Pilatsky, then with the district attorney's office, prosecuted Madeline Tully for having harbored the notorious "Arsenal Gang." Pilatsky sent her to jail . . . Madeline was released, but has been rearrested, indicted for having harbored the Rubel ice-robbery gang. The lawyer who is defending her in this case is the man who once sent her to jail—Charles Pilatsky.

WAR DEPARTMENT: Mayor LaGuardia commanded a group of American aviators in Italy during the war, and the Italian commandant thought it would be a nice gesture if he and LaGuardia made a flight over the Austrian lines . . . When they had crossed the Austrian lines the plane suddenly started to descend—over a cemetery—and LaGuardia gripped the guns. The ship almost scraped the earth, while the Italian officer threw kisses at the ground—lifted the nose of the plane, and brought it home . . . "What's the idea of taking me across the Austrian lines, just to blow kisses at a cemetery?" demanded LaGuardia . . . "Respect," the other explained. "My relatives."

John Barrymore Here Next Week In New Comedy

"My Dear Children" Also Will Present His Wife, Elaine Barrie

There will be a red-letter attraction at the National Theater the week beginning Monday night, March 27, when Aldrich and Myers present America's foremost male star, John Barrymore, in a new and sparkling comedy, "My Dear Children," by Catherine Turney and Jerry Horwin.

The intense interest in this engagement is intensified by the fact that Elaine Barrie (Mrs. Barrymore) is featured in the cast. Also prominent in the roster of players is Tala Birell, glamorous Viennese actress of the legitimate stage in Austria, brought to this country for the movie, "The Doomed Battalion." Her most recent big picture was "Josette." Philip Reed, who has played leads with Tallulah Bankhead, Constance Cummings and other stars, and has been featured in many English and American pictures, likewise is prominently assigned.

The play is staged by Otto L. Preminger, noted Viennese director, who has distinguished himself in this country with his direction of "Outward Bound," current Broadway hit, and the Gilbert Miller production of "Libel."

The setting, a chateau in the Swiss Alps, was designed by Donald Oenslager.

Theatergoers are thrilled with the thought that John Barrymore is returning to the legitimate theater after an absence of nearly 15 years. Echoes still reverberate of his great triumph as Hamlet both here and in England. In New York he achieved the longest run ever made in Shakespeare's greatest play. Also still remembered are his splendid performances in "Richard III," "The Jest," "Justice" and "Peter Ibbetson."

His spectacular career as a legitimate stage star has been equaled since by his record in motion pictures and on the radio.

In the cast also are Dorothy McGuire, Lois Hall, Lloyd Gough, Arnold Korff, Otto Hewlett, Ronald Hogue, Stiano Braggiotti, George Reynolds and Ralph Macbane.

STARS OF THE NEW WEEK'S STAGES AND SCREENS

Gayety

"High Steppers," starring Lillian Dixon, will be the attraction at the Gayety Theater for the week beginning this afternoon. The burlesque production also boasts two featured comedians, Billy Hagen and Billy Fields.

The display artists are Joan Marvis, Doris Weston and Allene Dale; Mlle. Alexianne and Les Sposler also dance and clown.

The final performance will be on Saturday midnight in conjunction with the Gayety's newly inaugurated jitterbug contest.

Shaw's "Candida"

of none of the flexibility of scene of which the cinema is capable.

Now Mr. Welles, in his "Five Kings," Part I, has exactly reversed the process. With an abridgement of two of Shakespeare's chronicle plays, in their various parts, as the medium of his bold experiment, he has placed a "motion picture" upon the boards of the traditional theater.

As the dissolving scenes of "Five Kings" welded themselves into so impressive a mosaic of continuous dialogue and action on last Monday night in the National Theater, the thought was inescapable to this department that the youthful Mr. Welles had undertaken a startling innovation in the theater by bringing practically the complete technique of the films to a branch of the theater to which it was a total stranger. The result was as surprising as it was interesting and revolutionary. The justification of our suspicions already has been set forth in type in our usual daily space.

"Five Kings" is not Shakespearean drama at its best. It sacrifices something of literary grandeur and sustained artistry by the very novelty of its manner of presentation. It is, nevertheless, tremendously vital and moving "theater." Students of the Bard may resent the liberties it takes with the text of the plays that are incorporated into the Part I that constitutes the only segment of the monumental work that has been perfected to the point of public performance. Students of the sheer mechanics of the stage, notwithstanding, must recognize in it a remarkable departure from the customary procedures that shape themselves back of the footlights.

Orson Welles is a young man of astounding cleverness and imagination. He proved that last season with his "streamlined," modern-dress production of "Julius Caesar" and emphasizes his claim to the title of "supreme innovator" by the completely unconventional uses he has made of a technique that most producers pretend to abhor in bringing to his "Five Kings" a novelty of treatment that makes Shagespeare a living contemporary of De Mille, Lubitsch, Frank Capra, Frank Lloyd and the rest of the cinema's ace directors who flutter their wings in the first flight.

The 23-year-old Mr Welles may not be the theater's present-day genius, but he comes a little more dangerously close than anyone else whose name comes to mind as these lines are written at 3:10 on Friday morning.

So we will let it rest at that.

Institute, has won much acclaim for his playing of the pi-pa, the Chinese guitar.

Mrs. Tong plays the uhhappy wife in the parting scene from "Lady Precious Stream" and performs the delicate scarf dance of Chang-O, who, having stolen the fruit of longevity, fled to the moon for refuge.

Miss Ethel Chun, granddaughter of Sir Shousen Chow, of Hongkong, is noted for her singing of the folk song, "The Great Wall of China."

The program was recently presented here to the local nationals as well as the general public with such success that this repeat performance was arranged.

Jo Ann Sayers Has Sorority Fan Club

Jo Ann Sayers is one of the few actresses in Hollywood who can boast of a collegiate fan club.

Jo Ann's sorority sisters at the University of Washington have started it, and her old room at the house serves as the meeting place. Each picture in which she appears is represented by a set of framed stills on the walls of the room.

A Piece of Pie

By Damon Runyon

"I am on a diet," Nicely-Nicely says. "I lose 83 pounds in two months, and am now down to 200." And with this he pulls out the waistband of his pants, and shows enough space to hide War Admiral in

In any eating contest the principals may speak to each other if they wish, though smart eaters never wish to do this, as talking only wastes energy. This is the story of a contestant who spoke to Nicely Jones and the surprising results.

ON BOYLSTON street, in the city of Boston, Mass., there is a joint where you can get as nice a broiled lobster as anybody ever slaps a lip over, and who is in there one evening partaking of this tidbit but a character by the name of Horse Thief and me.

This Horse Thief is called Horsey for short, and he is not called by this name because he ever steals a horse but because it is the consensus of public opinion from coast to coast that he may steal one if the opportunity presents.

Personally, I consider Horsey a very fine character, because any time he is holding anything he is willing to share his good fortune with one and all, and at this time in Boston he is holding plenty. It is the time we make the race meeting at Suffolk Downs, and Horsey gets to going very good, indeed, and in fact he is now a character of means, and is my host against the broiled lobster.

Well, at a table next to us are four or five characters who all seem to be well-dressed, and stout-set, and red-faced, and prosperous-looking, and who all speak with the true Boston accent, which consists of many ah's and very few r's. Characters such as these are familiar to anybody who is ever in Boston very much, and they are bound to be politicians, retired cops, or contractors, because Boston is really quite infested with characters of this nature.

I am paying no attention to them, because they are drinking local ale, and talking loud, and long ago I learn that when a Boston character is engaged in aleing himself up, it is a good idea to let him alone, because the best you can get out of him is maybe a boff on the beezer. But Horsey is in there on the old Ear-ie, and very much interested in their conversation, and finally I listen myself just to hear what is attracting his attention, when one of the characters speaks as follows:

"Well," he says, "I am willing to bet ten thousand dollars that he can outeat anybody in the United States any time."

NOW AT THIS, Horsey gets right up and steps over to the table and bows and smiles in a friendly way on one and all, and says:

"Gentlemen," he says, "pardon the intrusion, and excuse me for billing in, but," he says, "do I understand you are speaking of a great eater who resides in your fair city?"

Well, these Boston characters all gaze at Horsey in such a hostile manner that I am expecting any one of them to get up and request him to let them miss him, but he keeps on bowing and smiling, and they can see that he is a gentleman, and finally one of them says:

"Yes," he says, "we are speaking of a character by the name of Joel Duffie. He is without doubt the greatest eater alive. He just wins a unique wager. He bets a character from Bangor, Me., that he can eat a whole window display of oysters in this very restaurant, and he not only eats all the oysters but he then wishes to wager that he can also eat the shells, but," he says, "it seems that the character from Bangor, Me., unfortunately taps out on the first proposition and has nothing with which to bet on the second."

"Very interesting," Horsey says. "Very interesting, if true, but," he says, "unless my ears deceive me, I hear one of you state that he is willing to wager $10,000 on this eater of yours against anybody in the United States."

"Your ears are perfect," another of the Boston characters says. "I state it, although," he says, "I admit it is a sort of figure of speech. But I state it all right," he says, "and never let it be said that a Conway ever pigs it on a betting proposition."

"Well," Horsey says, "I do not have a tenner on me at the moment, but," he says, "I have here $1,000 to put up as a forfeit that I can produce a character who will outeat your party for $10,000, and as much more as you care to put up."

And with this, Horsey outs with a bundle of coarse notes and tosses it on the table, and right away one of the Boston characters, whose name turns out to be Carroll, slaps his hand on the money and says:

"Bet."

Well, now this is prompt action to be sure, and if there is one thing I admire more than anything else, it is action, and I can see that these are characters of true sporting instincts and I commence wondering where I can raise a few dibs to take a piece of Horsey's proposition, because, of course, I know that he has nobody in mind to do the eating for his side but Nicely-Nicely Jones.

And knowing Nicely-Nicely Jones, I am prepared to wager all the money I can possibly raise that he can outeat anything that walks on two legs. In fact, I will take a chance on Nicely-Nicely against anything on four legs, except maybe an elephant, and at that he may give the elephant a photo finish.

I DO NOT SAY that Nicely-Nicely is the greatest eater in all history, but what I do say is, he belongs up there as a contender. In fact, Prof. D., who is a professor in a college out West before he turns to playing the horses for a livelihood, and who makes a study of history in his time, says he will not be surprised but what Nicely-Nicely figures one-two.

Professor D. says we must always remember that Nicely-Nicely eats under the handicaps of modern civilization, which require that an eater use a knife and fork, or anyway a knife, while in the old days eating with the hands was a popular custom and much faster. Professor D. says he has no doubt that under the old rules Nicely-Nicely will hang up a record that will endure through the ages, but of course maybe Professor D. overlays Nicely-Nicely somewhat.

Well, now that the match is agreed upon, naturally Horsey and the Boston characters begin discussing where it is to take place, and one of the Boston characters suggests a neutral ground, such as New London, Conn., or Providence, R. I., but Horsey holds out for New York, and it seems that Boston characters are always ready to visit New York, so he does not meet with any great opposition on this point.

They all agree on a date four weeks later so as to give the principals plenty of time to get ready, although Horsey and I know that this is really unnecessary as far as Nicely-Nicely is concerned, because one thing about him is he is always in condition to eat.

This Nicely-Nicely Jones is a character who is maybe 5 feet 8 inches tall, and about 5 feet 9 inches wide, and when he is in good shape he will weigh upward of 283 pounds. He is a horse player by trade, and eating is really just a hobby, but he is undoubtedly a wonderful eater even when he is not hungry.

Well, as soon as Horsey and I return to New York, we hasten to Mindy's restaurant on Broadway and relate the bet Horsey makes in Boston, and right away so many citizens, including Mindy himself, wish to take a piece of the proposition that it is oversubscribed by a large sum in no time.

Then Mindy remarks that he does not see Nicely-Nicely Jones for a month of Sundays, and then everybody present remembers that they do not see Nicely-Nicely around lately, either, and this leads to a discussion of where Nicely-Nicely can be, although up to this moment if nobody sees Nicely-Nicely but once in the next ten years it will be considered sufficient.

WELL, WILLIE the Worrier, who is a bookmaker by trade, is among those present, and he remembers that the last time he looks for Nicely-Nicely hoping to collect a marker of some years standing, Nicely-Nicely is living at the Rest Hotel in West Forty-ninth street, and nothing will do Horsey but I must go with him over to the Rest to make inquiry for Nicely-Nicely, and there we learn that he leaves a forwarding address away up on Morningside Heights in care of somebody by the name of Slocum.

So Horsey calls a short, and away we go to this address, which turns out to be a five-story walk-up apartment, and a card downstairs shows that Slocum lives on the top floor. It takes Horsey and me ten minutes to walk up the five flights, as we are by no means accustomed to exercise of this nature, and when we finally reach a door marked Slocum we are plumb tuckered out and have to sit down on the top step and rest a while.

Then I ring the bell at this door marked Slocum and who appears but a tall young Judy with black hair who is, without doubt, beautiful, but who is so skinny we have to look twice to see her, and when I ask her if she can give me any information about a party named Nicely-Nicely Jones she says to me, like this:

"I guess you mean Quentin," she says. "Yes," she says, "Quentin is here. Come in, gentlemen."

So we step into an apartment, and as we do so a thin, sickly-looking character gets up out of a chair by the window and, in a weak voice, says good evening. It is a good evening, at that; so Horsey and I say good evening right back at him, very polite, and then we stand there waiting for Nicely-Nicely to appear, when the beautiful skinny young Judy says:

"Well," she says, "this is Mr. Quentin Jones."

Then Horsey and I take another swivel at the thin character, and we can see that it is nobody but Nicely-Nicely, at that, but the way he changes since we last observe him is practically shocking to us both, because he is undoubtedly all shrunk up. In fact, he looks as if he is about half what he is in his prime, and his face is pale and thin, and his eyes are away back in his head and, while we both shake hands with him, it is some time before either of us is able to speak. Then Horsey finally says:

"Nicely," he says, "can we have a few words with you in private on a very important proposition?"

WELL, AT THIS, and before Nicely-Nicely can answer aye, yes or no, the beautiful skinny young Judy goes out of the room and slams a door behind her, and Nicely says:

"My fiancee, Miss Hilda Slocum," he says. "She is a wonderful charatcer. We are to be married as soon as I lose 20 pounds more. It will take a couple of weeks longer," he says.

My goodness gracious, Nicely," Horsey says. "What do you mean, lose 20 pounds more? You are practically emaciated now. Are you just out of a sick bed, or what?"

"Why," Nicely-Nicely say, "certainly I am not out of a sick bed. I am never healthier in my life. I am on a diet. I lose 83 pounds in two months, and am now down to 200. I feel great," he says. "It is all because of my fiancee, Miss Hilda Slocum. She rescues me from gluttony and obesity, or anyway," Nicely-Nicely says, "this is what Miss Hilda Slocum calls it.

My, I feel good. I love Miss Hilda Slocum very much," Nicely-Nicely says. "It is a case of love at first sight on both sides the day we meet in the subway. I am wedged in one of the turnstile gates, and she kindly pushes on me from behind until I wiggle through. I can see she has a kind heart, so I date her up for a movie that night and propose to her while the newsreel is on. But," Nicely-Nicely says, "Hilda tells me at once that she will never marry a fat slob. She says I must put myself in her hands and she will reduce me by scientific methods and then she will become my everloving wife, but not before.

"So," Nicely-Nicely says, I come to live here with Miss Hilda Slocum and her mother, so she can supervise my diet. Her mother is thinner than Hilda. And I surely feel great," Nicely-Nicely says. "Look," he says.

And with this, he pulls out the waistband of his pants, and shows enough space to hide War Admiral in, but the effort seems to be a strain on him, and he has to sit down in a chair again.

"My goodness gracious," Horsey says. "What do you eat, Nicely?"

"Well," Nicely-Nicely says, "I eat anything that does not contain starch, but," he says, of course everything worth eating contains starch, so I really do not eat much of anything whatever. My fiancee, Miss Hilda Slocum, arranges my diet. She is an expert dietitian and runs a widely known department in a diet magazine by the name of Let's Keep House."

THEN HORSEY tells Nicely-Nicely of how he is matched to eat against this Joel Duffie, of Boston, for a nice side bet, and how he has a forfeit of a $1,000 already posted for appearance, and how many of Nicely-Nicely's admirers along Broadway are looking to win themselves out of all their troubles by betting on him, and at first Nicely-Nicely listens with great interest, and his eyes are shining like six bits, but then he becomes very sad, and says:

"It is no use, gentlemen," he says. "My fiancee, Miss Hilda Slocum, will never hear of me going off my diet even for a little while. Only yesterday I try to talk her into letting me have a little pumpernickel instead of toasted whole wheat bread, and she says if I even think of such a thing again, she will break our engagement. Horsey," he says, "do you ever eat toasted whole wheat bread for a month hand running? Toasted?" he says.

"No," Horsey says. "What I eat is nice, white French bread, and corn muffins, and hot biscuits with gravy on them."

"Stop," Nicely-Nicely says. "You are eating yourself into an early grave, and, furthermore," he says, "you are breaking my heart. But," he says, "the more I think of my following depending on me in this emergency, the sadder it makes me feel to think I am unable to oblige them. However," he says, "let us call Miss Hilda Slocum in on an outside chance and see what her reactions to your proposition are."

So we call Miss Hilda Slocum in, and Horsey explains our predicament in putting so much faith in Nicely-Nicely only to find him dieting, and Miss Hilda Slocum's reactions are to order Horsey and me out of the joint with instructions never to darken her door again, and when we are a block away we can still hear her voice speaking very firmly to Nicely-Nicely.

Well, personally, I figure this ends the matter, for I can see that Miss Hilda Slocum is a most determined character, indeed, and the chances are it does end it, at that, if Horsey does not happen to get a wonderful break.

He is at Belmont Park one afternoon, and he has a real good thing in a jump race, and when a brisk young character in a hard straw hat and eyeglasses comes along and asks him what he likes, Horsey mentions this good thing, figuring he will move himself in for a few dibs if the good thing connects.

Well, it connects all right, and the brisk young character is very grateful to Horsey for his information, and is giving him plenty of much-obliges, and nothing else, and Horsey is about to mention that they do not accept much-obliges at his hotel, when the brisk young character mentions that he is nobody but Mr. McBurgle and that he is the editor of the Let's Keep House magazine, and for Horsey to drop in and see him any time he is around his way.

NATURALLY, Horsey remembers what Nicely-Nicely says about Miss Hilda Slocum working for this Let's Keep House magazine, and he relates the story of the eating contest to Mr. McBurgle and asks him if he will kindly use his influence with Miss Hilda Slocum to get her to release Nicely-Nicely from his diet long enough for the contest. Then Horsey gives Mr. McBurgle a tip on another winner, and Mr. McBurgle must use plenty of influence on Miss Hilda Slocum at once, as the next day she calls Horsey up at his hotel before he is out of bed, and speaks to him as follows:

"Of course," Miss Hilda Slocum says, "I will never change my attitude about Quentin, but," she says, "I can appreciate that he feels very bad about you gentlemen relying on him and having to disappoint you. He feels that he lets you down, which is by no means true, but it weighs upon his mind. It is interfering with his diet.

"Now," Miss Hilda Slocum says, "I do not approve of your contest, because," she says, "it is placing a premium on gluttony, but I have a friend by the name of Miss Violette Shumberger who may answer your purpose. She is my dearest friend from childhood, but it is only because I love her dearly that this friendship endures. She is extremely fond of eating," Miss Hilda Slocum says. "In spite of my pleadings, and my warnings, and my own example, she persists in food. It is disgusting to me but I finally learn that it is no use arguing with her.

"She remains my dearest friend," Miss Hilda Slocum says, "though she continues her practice of eating, and I am informed that she is phenomenal in this respect. In fact," she says, "Nicely-Nicely tells me to say to you that if Miss Violette Shumberger can perform the eating exploits I relate to him from hearsay she is a lily. Goodby," Miss Hilda Slocum says. "You cannot have Nicely-Nicely."

Well, nobody cares much about this idea of a stand-in for Nicely-Nicely in such a situation, and especially a Judy that no one ever hears of before, and many citizens are in favor of pulling out of the contest altogether. But Horsey has his thousand-dollar forfeit to think of, and as no one can suggest anyone else, he finally arranges a personal meet with the Judy suggested by Miss Hilda Slocum.

HE COMES into Mindy's one evening with a female character who is so fat it is necessary to push three tables together to give her room for her lap, and it seems that this character is Miss Violette Shumberger. She weighs maybe 250 pounds, but she is by no means an old Judy, and by no means bad-looking. She has a face the size of a town clock and enough chins for a fire escape, but she has a nice smile, and pretty teeth, and a laugh that is so hearty it knocks the whipped cream off an order of strawberry shortcake on a table 50 feet away and arouses the indignation of a customer by the name of Goldstein who is about to consume same.

Well, Horsey's idea in bringing her into Mindy's is to get some kind of line on her eating form, and she is clocked by many experts when she starts putting on the hot meat, and it is agreed by one and all that she is by no means a selling-plater. In fact, by the time she gets through, even Mindy admits she has plenty of class, and the upshot of it all is Miss Violette Shumberger is chosen to eat against Joel Duffie.

Maybe you hear something of this great eating contest that comes off in New York one night in the early summer of 1937. Of course, eating contests are by no means anything new, and in fact they are quite an old-fashioned pastime in some sections of this country, such as the South and East, but this is the first big public contest of the kind in years, and it creates no little comment along Broadway.

In fact, there is some mention of it in the blats, and it is not a frivolous proposition in any respect, and more dough is wagered on it than any other eating contest in history, with Joel Duffie a 6-to-5 favorite over Miss Violette Shumberger all the way through.

This Joel Duffie comes to New York several days before the contest with the character by the name of Conway, and requests a meet with Miss Violette Shumberger to agree on the final details and who shows up with Miss Violette Shumberger as her coach and adviser but Nicely-Nicely Jones. He is even thinner and more peaked-looking than when Horsey and I see him last, but he says he feels great, and that he is within six pounds of his marriage to Miss Hilda Slocum.

WELL, IT SEEMS that his presence is really due to Miss Hilda Slocum herself, because she says that after getting her dearest friend, Miss Violette Shumberger, into this jackpot, it is only fair to do all she can to help her win it, and the only way she can think of is to let Nicely-Nicely give Violette the benefit of his experience and advice.

But afterward we learn that what really happens is that this editor, Mr. McBurgle, gets greatly interested in the contest, and when he discovers that in spite of his influence, Miss Hilda Slocum declines to permit Nicely-Nicely to personally compete, but puts in a pinch eater, he is quite indignant and insists on her letting Nicely-Nicely school Violette.

Furthermore, we afterward learn that when Nicely-Nicely returns to the apartment on Morningside Heights after giving Violette a lesson, Miss Hilda Slocum always smells his breath to see if he indulges in any food during his absence.

Well, this Joel Duffie is a tall character with stooped shoulders and a sad expression, and he does not look as if he can eat his way out of a tea shoppe, but as soon as he commences to discuss the details of the contest, anybody can see that he knows what time it is in situations such as this. In fact Nicely-Nicely says he can tell at once from the way Joel Duffie talks that he is a dangerous opponent, and he says, while Miss Violette Shumberger impresses him as an improving eater, he is only sorry she does not have more seasoning.

This Joel Duffie suggests that the contest consist of 12 courses of strictly American food, each side to be allowed to pick six dishes, doing the picking in rotation, and specifying the weight and quantity of the course selected to any amount the contestant making the pick desires, and each course is to be divided for eating exactly in half, and after Miss Violette Shumberger and Nicely-Nicely whisper together a while, they say the terms are quite satisfactory.

THEN HORSEY tosses a coin for the first pick, and Joel Duffie says heads, and it is heads, and he chooses as the first course two quarts of ripe olives, 12 bunches of celery and four pounds of shelled nuts, all this to be split 50-50 between them. Miss Violette Shumberger names 12 dozen cherry-stone clams as the second course, and Joel Duffie says two gallons of Philadelphia pepperpot soup as the third.

Well, Miss Violette Shumberger and Nicely-Nicely whisper together again, and Violette puts in two 5-pound striped bass, the heads and tails not to count in the eating, and Joel Duffie names a 22-pound roast turkey. Each vegetable is rated as one course, and Miss Violette Shumberger asks for 12 pounds of mashed potatoes with brown gravy. Joel Duffie says two dozen ears of corn on the cob, and Violette replies with two quarts of lima beans. Joel Duffie calls for 12 bunches of asparagus cooked in butter, and Violette mentions 10 pounds of stewed new peas.

This gets them down to the salad, and it is Joel Duffie's play, so he says 6 pounds of mixed green salad with vinegar and oil dressing, and now Miss Violette Shumberger has the final selection, which is the desert. She says it is a pumpkin pie, 2 feet across, and not less than 3 inches deep.

It is agreed that they must eat with knife, fork or spoon, but speed is not to count, and there is to be no time limit, except they cannot pause more than 2 consecutive minutes at any stage, except in case of hiccoughs. They can drink anything, and as much as they please, but liquids are not to count in the scoring. The decision is to be strictly on the amount of food consumed, and the judges are to take account of anything left on the plates after a course, but not of loose chewings on bosom or vest up to an ounce. The losing side is to pay for the food, and in case of a tie they are to eat it off immediately on ham and eggs only.

Well, the scene of this contest is the second-floor dining room of Mindy's restaurant, which is closed to the general public for the occasion, and only parties immediately concerned in the contest are admitted. The contestants are seated on either side of a big table in the center of the room, and each contestant has three waiters.

No talking, and no rooting from the spectators is permitted, but of course, in any eating contest the principals may speak to each other if they wish though smart eaters never wish to do this, as talking only wastes energy, and about all they ever say to each other is please pass the mustard.

ABOUT 50 characters from Boston are present to witness the contest, and the same number of citizens of New York are admitted, and among them is this editor, Mr. McBurgle, and he is around asking Horsey if he thinks Miss Violette Shumberger is as good a thing as the jumper at the race track.

Nicely-Nicely arrives on the scene quite early, and his appearance is really most distressing to his old friends and admirers, as by this time he is shy so much weight that he is a pitiful scene, to be sure, but he tells Horsey and me that he thinks Miss Violette Shumberger has a good chance.

"Of course," he says, "she is green. She does not know how to pace herself in competition. But," he says, "she has a wonderful style. I love to watch her eat. She likes the same things I do in the days when I am eating. She is a wonderful character, too. Do you ever notice her smile?" Nicely-Nicely says.

"But," he says, "she is the dearest friend of my fiancee, Miss Hilda Slocum, so let us not speak of this. I try to get Hilda to come to see the contest, but she says it is repulsive. Well, anyway," Nicely-Nicely says, "I manage to borrow a few dibs, and am wagering on Miss Violette Shumberger. By the way," he says, "if you happen to think of it, notice her smile."

Well, Nicely-Nicely takes a chair about 10 feet behind Miss Violette Shumberger, which is as close as the judges will allow him, and he is warned by them that no coaching from the corners will be permitted, but of course Nicely-Nicely knows this rule as well as they do, and furthermore by this time his exertions seem to have left him without any more energy.

There are three judges, and they are all from neutral territory. One of these judges is a party from Baltimore, Md., by the name of Packard, who runs a restaurant, and another is a party from Providence, R. I., by the name of Croppers, who is a sausage manufacturer. The third judge is an old Judy by the name of Mrs. Rhubarb, who comes from Philadelphia, and once kept an actors' boarding house, and is considered an excellent judge of eaters.

Well, Mindy is the official starter, and at 8:30 p. m. sharp, when there is still much betting among the spectators, he outs with his watch and says like this:

"Are you ready, Boston? Are you ready, New York?"

Miss Violette Shumberger and Joel Duffie both nod their heads, and Mindy says commence, and the contest is on, with Joel Duffie getting the jump at once on the celery and olives and nuts.

IT IS APPARENT that this Joel Duffie is one of these rough-and-tumble eaters that you can hear quite a distance off, especially on clams and soups. He is also an eyebrow eater, an eater whose eyebrows go up as high as the part in his hair as he eats, and this type of eater is undoubtedly very efficient.

In fact, the way Joel Duffie goes through the groceries down to the turkey causes the Broadway spectators some uneasiness, and they are whispering to each other that they only wish the old Nicely-Nicely is in there. But personally, I like the way Miss Violette Shumberger eats without undue excitement, and with great zest. She cannot keep close to Joel Duffie in the matter of speed in the early stages of the contest, as she seems to enjoy chewing her food, but I observe that as it goes along she pulls up on him, and I figure this is not because she is stepping up her pace, but because he is slowing down.

When the turkey finally comes on, and is split in two halves right down the middle, Miss Violette Shumberger looks greatly disappointed, and she speaks for the first time as follows:

"Why," she says, 'where is the stuffing?"

Well, it seems that nobody mentions any stuffing for the turkey to the chef, so he does not make any stuffing, and Miss Violette Shumberger's disappointment is so plain to be seen that the confidence of the Boston characters is somewhat shaken. They can see that a Judy who can pack away as much fodder as Miss Violette Shumberger has to date, and then beef for stuffing, is really quite an eater.

In fact, Joel Duffie looks quite startled when he observes Miss Violette Shumbreger's disappointment, and he gazes at her with great respect as she disposes of her share of the turkey, and the mashed potatoes, and one thing and another in such a manner that she moves up on the pumpkin pie on dead even terms with him. In fact, there is little to choose between them at this point, although the judge from Baltimore is calling the attention of the other judges to a turkey leg that he claims Miss Violette Shumberger does not clean as neatly as Joel Duffie does his, but the other judges dismiss this as a technicality.

Then the waiters bring on the pumpkin pie, and it is without doubt quite a large pie, and in fact it is about the size of a manhole cover, and I can see that Joel Duffie is observing this pie with a strange expression on his face, although the judge from Providence, R. I., wishes to know if Nicely-Nicely will kindly relate what passes between him and Violette so they may make a decision.

"Why," Nicely-Nicely says, "all she asks me is can I get her another piece of pie when she finishes the one in front of her."

NOW AT THIS, Joel Duffie throws down his knife, and pushes back his plate with all but two bites of his pie left on it, and says to the Boston characters like this:

"Gentlemen," he says, "I am licked. I cannot eat another mouthful. You must admit I put up a game battle, but," he says, "it is useless for me to go on against this Judy who is asking for more pie before she even starts on what is before her. I am almost dying as it is, and I do not wish to destroy myself in a hopeless effort. Gentlemen," he says, "she is not human."

Well, of course this amounts to throwing in the old napkin and Nicely-Nicely stands up on his chair, and says:

Then the waiters bring on the pumpkin pie, and it is without doubt quite a large pie, and in fact, it is about the size of a manhole cover, and I can see that Joe Duffie is observing this pie with a strange expression on his face

Gropper Mural Graces Interior Building

Portrayal of Dam Shows the Skill and Power of Artist

By Alice Graeme.

The installation of a large mural by William Gropper took place recently in the new Department of the Interior Building. The mural, commissioned by the section of fine arts, of the Treasury, is to be found in one of the lobbies on the second floor. The space is divided into three rectangular panels, of which the center is the largest. The mural occupies the entire far wall of the lobby, which, fortunately, is large and open enough to allow a proper setting for the decoration. As the lobby marks the end of a long corridor, the mural, at least the central portion, can be seen at some distance. The design is strong and carries excellently. As one approaches the lobby the two flanking panels may be seen and the mural appears as a whole. The proximity of a number of heavily framed portraits on the adjacent walls is decidedly out of key with the general effect, but the lighting here, contrary to conditions in some of the decorated lobbies and alcoves, is even and good.

Mr. Gropper has chosen the building of a dam as the subject for his mural. No specific scene is represented, but Gropper has used several dramatic phases of the work on the huge Government projects which he has visited around the country. The rugged mountain background and the massive concrete face of a dam in the process of construction would suggest Boulder Dam and the Western mountains in tha region. Mr. Gropper is an artist of experience and this is not his first mural for the Government. In his work at the Interior Department he shows an understanding of the medium of mural painting. His design has unity and is appropriate in scale and color to the space for which it was planned. This is far more than can be said for a number of the present-day murals. The difference between easel and mural painting is considerable, and it is through an appreciation of these limitations and differences that the competent muralist finds his power. Frank Jewett Mather, jr., once wrote: " . . . the successful execution of mural painting is achieved through the most complicated adjustments, through overcoming constantly outcropping obstacles—is, in short, a function much more akin to that of the architect carrying through a monumental building than it is akin to the task of the easel painter, who paints as he pleases and sells his picture if he can."

Worked for Newspapers

For many years Gropper has been cartoonist for several of the papers of the left wing. He has learned in his work the lesson of forceful presentation and of telling design. The long years of daily work for the newspapers have taught him to simplify and to be direct in what he has to say. As his preoccupation has always been in worker themes, Gropper must find congenial subject matter in depicting one of the great construction feats of the day and the working environment of the army of men who accomplished it.

Panels Well Balanced

The three panels, each with its group of men working at different construction jobs, together make an interesting and varied presentation of the subject of dam building. Gropper has balanced and placed each part of his pattern skillfully, so that his mural has both clarity and firmness of design. The workers, the construction and the landscape stand out against the simple treatment of the sky. Gropper has not been afraid to leave spacious areas of the canvas to his sky background, a plain, flat wash of slate blue, except for two stylized clouds which help tie the composition together. The misty distance of the mountains and the far-off concrete mass of the dam give a sense of perspective and depth to the scene. The mountain, perhaps, might have been as strong a feature of the design on a slightly smaller scale. The color, on the whole, seems adequate. The use of black and white in the painting of the girders suspended by the crane in the central panel is effective. The blue of the blue prints in the engineers' hands carries and harmonizes with the slate blue of the sky. The men are mostly in somber colors, olive greens and tans, enlivened by the touch here and there of a red bandana handkerchief.

On the whole, Mr. Gropper has done a successful piece of work. He has made a scene of action, where action was called for, and he has shown sturdy and clear-cut drawing to carry off the realistic subject matter. There is neither social propaganda here, nor the poetic language and the subtleties of undertreatment which he sometimes allows himself. Gropper has struck a middle road between these capabilities and finished creditably the job he set out to do.

Burgess Drawings On Exhibit

Young D. C. Painter Shows Sincerity, Versatility and Sense of Design

A group of lithographs and drawings by Marguerite Burgess is now on view at the main building of the Public Library. Miss Burgess is a young Washington painter whose work has been seen here in the last few years in group exhibitions. Her canvases were included in the showing of the Society of Washington Artists at the Corcoran this winter, as well as the Christmas exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

Marguerite Burgess is a sincere and serious painter. She is not easily misled into superficial effects, but shows taste and an earnest effort to make her medium express what she has to say. Her style is by no means set, and she is experimenting and reaching out to find what avenues she may. It is encouraging to find variety of manner in the work of a young artist and generally means two valuable characteristics, an open mind and a certain eagerness to explore.

Miss Burgess draws broadly with the lithographic pencil in such prints as her "Trees," or "November Fields." Her strokes are wide here and create a misty, soft effect. In "Next Case" her manner is more careful, the strokes short and staccato. This drawing, incidentally, is one of the most interesting of the group.

In landscapes like "The Furnace," Miss Burgess shows a competent arrangement of her subject matter, and a good sense of values.

In drawing the figure Miss Burgess is perhaps less secure but shows an informal and good placing of her figures in a composition. The drawing of a girl seated at a table, and "Julie Ironing" are the most interesting of her figure work. The almost abstracted design which she uses in some papers as "The Frame Shop" and also in "Victorian Fragment" is a phase of her work which she should develop further. Miss Burgess, despite certain inequalities of technique, is an artist of taste and of promise.

Piece of Pie

"Three cheers for Miss Violette Shumberger!"

Then Nicely-Nicely gives the first cheer in person, but the effort overtaxes his strength, and he falls off the chair in a faint just as Joel Duffie collapses under the table, and the doctors at the clinic hospital are greatly baffled to receive, from the same address at the same time, one patient who is suffering from undernourishment, and another patient who is unconscious from overeating.

Well, in the meantime, after the excitement subsides, and wagers are settled, we take Miss Violette Shumberger to the main floor in Mindy's for a midnight snack, and when she speaks of her wonderful triumph, she is disposed to give much credit to Nicely-Nicely Jones.

"You see," Violette says, "what I really whisper to him is that I am a goner. I whisper to him that I cannot possibly take one bite of the pie if my life depends on it, and if he has any bets down, to try and hedge them off as quickly as possible.

"I fear," she says, "that Nicely-Nicely will be greatly disappointed in my showing, but I have a confession to make to him when he gets out of the hospital. I forget about the contest," Violette says, "and eat my regular dinner of pig's knuckles and sauerkraut an hour before the contest starts, and," she says, "I have no doubt this tends to affect my form somewhat." "So," she says, "I owe everything to Nicely-Nicely's quick thinking."

IT IS SEVERAL WEEKS after the great eating contest that I run into Miss Hilda Slocum on Broadway, and it seems to me that she looks much better nourished than the last time I see her, and when I mention this she says:

"Yes," she says, "I cease dieting. I learn my lesson," she says. "I learn that male characters do not appreciate anybody who tries to ward off surplus tissue. What male characters wish is substance. Why," she says, "only a week ago my editor, Mr. McBurgle, tells me he will love to take me dancing if only I get something on me for him to take hold of. I am very fond of dancing," she says.

"But," I say, "what of Nicely-Nicely Jones? I do not see him around lately."

"Why," Miss Hilda Slocum says, "do you not hear what this cad does? Why, as soon as he is strong enough to leave the hospital he elopes with my dearest friend, Miss Violette Shumberger, leaving me a note saying something about two souls with but a single thought. They are down in Florida, running a barbecue stand, and," she says, "the chances are, eating like seven mules."

"Miss Slocum," I says, "can I interest you in a portion of Mindy's chicken fricassee?"

"With dumpling?" Miss Hilda Slocum says. "Yes," she says, "you can. Afterwards I have a date to go dancing with Mr. McBurgle. I am crazy about dancing," she says.

Sterner Galleries Show Gay Oils Of Washingtonian

The Marie Sterner Galleries in New York are showing, until March 25, the work of Alice Acheson, Washington artist. Mrs. Acheson exhibited a group of her water colors, earlier this year, at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. The present New York exhibition coinsists of 22 of her oils, painted in the last few years.

A pupil of the Boston School of Design, the Corcoran and the Phillips Gallery School of Art, Mrs. Acheson has had considerable training for her work. Her point of view is always lively and gay, and one feels her evident enjoyment in what she paints. As a resident of Georgetown, Mrs. Acheson has become interested in the picturesque and amusing subjects to be found in that part of the city. Clapboard shanties, old gardens and three figures of colored people appear often in her pictures, and the Maryland countryside furnishes subject matter for many of her delightful landscapes. There is humor in her work, a qulity which in its genuine form appears too rarely in the canvases of present day artists. Alice Acheson observes well, and has the wit and taste to express her meaning in a gay and unforced style.

The Society of Washington Etchers announces an exhibition in April, and invites all etchers and lithographers to send prints. Information concerning entry can be obtained by calling the secretary, Inez Demonet, after 7 p. m., at Woodley 2966.

The Studio Gallery, which occupies one room in the art department of George Washington University, at 2131 G street, presents, during the year, a series of one-man exhibitions. The gallery is interested, primarily, in showing the work of Washington artists. Earlier in the season pictures by Hugh Collins, Rowland Lyon and others were exhibited here. The students of the department follow the exhibitions closely, and use the material on view in their studies on art appreciation and art criticism.

At present a group of water colors by Philip Fletcher Bell are to be seen. Mr. Bell is a young painter who has lived for some time in Washington. He is now director of the Children's Gallery of the WPA at 816 Independence avenue southwest.—A. G.

Landscapes and Still-Life in Water Colors By Mrs. Partridge Shown at Phillips Gallery

Water colors by Mary Elizabeth Partridge are on exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery until the end of the month.

The display comprises more than 40 paintings, all landscapes with the exception of a few still lifes. Renderings of mountains and trees predominate, with here and there a view of Georgetown spires, a bridge across the Potomac, or a farm scene executed in bright colors.

Mrs. Partridge outlines her forms with care; she uses water color not so much as a fluid medium whose very accidents often produce striking effects, but rather as a means of lending color to her outlines. Many of her compositions have admirable simplicity and good design. She is particularly successful in those paintings wherein the bare branches of trees predominate her wintry landscapes. Among those which seemed to us well organized and executed were "Dalecardia Reservoir," in which tall trees frame a view across the water to a snowy bank and distant hills, "Across the Road," where the trees make a striking pattern, and two paintings where curtained windows frame the view.

Mountains are painted mainly in an inky blue, which gives a somber aspect to this phase of her work. In "Lonely Mountain" the sobriety is relieved by the effective rendering of light on a stone wall in the foreground. "Valley Farm" is a lovely scene of a rolling countryside, executed with more freedom than is evident in some of Mrs. Partridge's other paintings, and with lighter color. "Moody Day" has real feeling; the grey sky in "Autumn" is handled with skill.

There is no doubt that Mrs. Partridge is advancing rapidly and this exhibition is a worthy tribute to her industry.

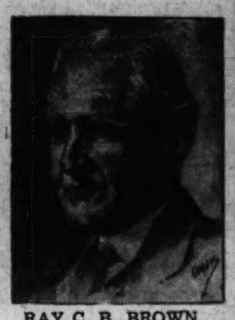
Wit Functions in Music As Surely as in Words

Denial of Its Presence in Compositions Based on Circumscribed Definition Of Wit as Verbal Humor

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Apropos of my review of last Sunday's concert by the National Symphony Orchestra, a correspondent asks me upon what grounds I base the statement that sentiment and wit are blended in Edward Burlingame Hill's violin concerto. "I am not inquiring idly or with any sarcastic intent," he writes, "for I would really like to know by what process a critic arrives at his judgments. To me, music is just music which I like or dislike without being able to tell why. I did feel the emotional sentiment in the lyric passages of the concerto, but I was not aware of any wit in the composition. How do you detect intellectual qualities in music, which you yourself have frequently said is primarily emotional in its appeal? Is not wit a literary attribute rather than a musical one?"



RAY C. B. BROWN.

The writer would have been still further justified in his questions if he could have read a paragraph which was deleted from the review for want of space. In that paragraph I went on to say that in the concerto there is abundant evidence that the composer is a man of culture and taste, of genial personality and keenly perceptive mind. On the basis of this remark, my correspondent might have asked how it is possible to deduce the characteristics of a composer from his music. Is it an arbitrary dictum to say that a composer is cultured, or do logical reasons exist for such a valuation?

Appraisal of music is a complex process in which are involved a natural or inculcated understanding of musical language, a wide experience in listening to all types of composition, a habit of logical thought, and the faculty of intuition. I am well aware that modern psychologists either deny that there is a faculty of intuition or declare that intuition is a word describing a conviction to which the logical approach remains obscure because the so-called intuitive person jumps to conclusions without thinking the matter through logically. Nevertheless, there is a faculty of intuition (instinctive knowledge without logical approach), and if a music critic does not possess it he would do well to retire from the profession.

Discernment of intellectual qualities in the emotional language of music results from the correlation between experience and intuition, as does the perception of a composer's characteristics. Wit is considered to be an exclusively literary attribute only because we are accustomed to associate it with verbal adroitness and not with musical phrasing. Wit, as distinguished from humor, has been frequent in composition ever since music became intellectualized as a form of social communication. Music could not be witty until its subtleties could be appreciated intellectually.

Claudio Monteverdi, product of the flowering of culture in the Italian renaissance, was one of the earliest wits in music. Each had much humor but little wit; Domenico Scarlatti had much wit but little humor; Haydn, Boccherini and Mozart were all witty composers. Beethoven was seldom witty and his humor was usually as rough as a practical joke. Although all generalizations are dangerous, one ventures to say that wit in music is found only in those composers whose social milieu fostered it. Viennese and Parisian composers, for example, are as a composite group notable for their wit.

At this point my correspondent could quote Harvey Grace against me: "The test of verbal wit and humor is its power of causing laughter; yet how often do we find a humoreske, burlesca or scherzo provoking even as much as a smile? It is fashionable just now to describe the orchestration of some very spicy modern works as 'witty.' But wit is entirely a verbal quality. An orchestral score can no more be witty than it can be wise. The only way in which music may approximate to verbal wit is in some of its uses of enharmonic change. Taking of a chord in one relation and leaving it in another is a kind of pun and, therefore, a form of wit."

I disagree totally with Mr. Grace, whose idea of wit is too circumscribed. Both in literature and in music wit is not confined to jesting; it consists as well in neatness and aptness of phrase, in concision of expression, in swift salience of thought, and in precision of emphasis. The maxims of La Rochefoucauld, for instance, are witty without being humorous; so is Ravel's sonatine for piano.

As for the deduction of a composer's personal characteristics from his music, that is the product on the one hand of logical reasoning from the premises of knowledge about his life and on the other hand of intuitional feeling. Logic is the stronger when one knows a great deal about the composer's life, and intuition predominates when one knows very little. When one knows absolutely nothing about the composer of a work which one is hearing for the first time, intuition has the field entirely to itself and must derive its conclusions from the form, the manner of expression, and the intellectual and spiritual content of the music.

Mendelssohn's Piano Work Is Recorded

It's a Concerto —And It's Not the Famous One for Violin

By Jay Walz.

It's nice to see Columbia give Mendelssohn a break by recording a concerto of his that isn't for violin, nor in the key of E minor. It doesn't seem possible there could be such a concerto, and we looked at the label twice before believing. But here's the fact: Felix's Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 for piano and orchestra, played by Ania Dorfmann and the London Symphony Orchestra, directed by Walter Goehr, is in Columbia's two-pocket set No. X-124, just released.

The work and the performance is refreshing, to say the least. So let's hope it's the first step in the revival of other Mendelssohn "unknowns," of which there is an impressive quantity.

The first piano concerto is short and sweet. Its three movements, all played without break, are about the length of only the first movement of most concertos. So there isn't time for interest to lag. As for the sentimentality, it's there, but it's spread too thin to get sticky.

Miss Ania Dorfmann, the young artist who played with the National Symphony here last season, is happily cast in this solo part. I think the recording men could have been a little more considerate of her—Walter Goehr's Orchestra engulfs her once in a while. On the other hand Mr. Goehr's Orchestra has lively things of its own to do. And looks after them in a most business-like manner.

Mozart's Divertimento in E flat (K. 563) isn't the slight piece of music that the name suggests. Look into its chronology and you find that it was written shortly after the composer produced the "Jupiter," one of his finest symphonies. It doesn't follow, then, that the Divertimento is equally as profound and great. But it does help explain the quantity and quality of inspiration that went into it.

This work is a trio (violin, viola and cello) which makes it an admirable vehicle for the Pasquier Trio, that has now recorded it on Columbia set No. 351, five large discs. This group's Mozartian flare gets every opportunity in the Divertimento's six varied movements. There's a country dance and a minuet; an andante with variations and an allegro with plenty of fast play.

Symphony To Play Poot Ballade

Famed Pro Arte String Quartet of Brussels To Be Soloists in Two Compositions

Next Sunday afternoon the Pro Arte String Quartet of Brussels will be soloists with the National Symphony Orchestra in two modern compositions. The first, to be given its American premiere, is a ballade for string quartet and orchestra by the Belgian composer, Marcel Poot; the second, receiving its first local performance, is a concerto for string quartet by the Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu. Dr. Hans Kindler will conduct.

Founded in 1912, the Pro Arte String Quartet has retained unchanged the original personnel: Alphonse Onnou, Laurent Halleux, Germain Prevost and Robert Maas. Renowned for the brilliant finish of their performances and their interpretative excellence in modern music, the group is regarded by many as the successor to the great Flonzaley Quartet.

Both of the works which they will play with the orchestra are being repeated from the Brussels festival held last May under the sponsorship of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Together with the programs which are being currently given by the Pro Arte Quartet at the Library of Congress, next Sunday's concert will enable music lovers to hear all the works presented at the Belgian festival.

Marcel Poot, born May 7, 1901, is both a composer and a music critic for one of the leading newspapers in Belgium. His works include an opera, a symphony, a symphonic poem, chamber music and piano pieces. He writes of his ballade that he chose that form in order to free himself from the restrictions of the classical concerto.

Bohuslav Martinu, born December 8, 1890, is a talented violinist as well as a composer. After experimenting with the French impressionistic school he became completely Czech in his ideals. In 1932 he won the Coolidge prize for a string quartet which had its premiere here in 1932. His list of works includes seven operas, seven ballets, a dozen orchestral works, two piano concerti, a violin concerto and many chamber music compositions.

After March 26 two more concerts remain in the National Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series, the Easter program on April 9 and the annual "request" program on April 16. At the final concert in the midweek series on Wednesday evening, April 12, Bruno Walter will be guest conductor in his only American appearance this spring outside Radio City. He is at present guest conductor of the N. B. C. Orchestra in its Saturday night broadcasts.

During the past week the National Symphony gave concerts in Shippensburg, Pa., and at Western Maryland College, Westminster. Tomorrow night the orchestra plays in Danville, Va., and on Tuesday night it will be heard in Charlottesville. Concerts are scheduled for Wednesday in Charleston, W. Va., and Thursday at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Blacksburg. Later in the month the orchestra will go on an extensive Southern tour.

Benny Goodman and Artie Shaw Resume Rivalry Here This Week

Both Clarinetists, Theyre Tops as Exponents of Swing And the Darling of Dance Cats

By Bill Gottlieb

Local cats are getting more kicks this week than have been available in Washington since Francis Scott Key chilled the populace with his "Star-Spangled Banner."

The reason: (if you don't already know) Benny Goodman and Artie Shaw, chief and supposedly bitterest rivals for the crown of Swingland, are appearing within a few days of each other.

The rivalry was dramatized some weeks back when both clarinetists played the same city (Newark) in theaters the same size, with the same caliber class B picture on each bill. It was a draw with both men and their bands pulling around $24,000 each for the week.

The Washington set-up is not exactly comparable. Shaw's engagement is a one-nighter; Goodman's, a week at the Earle. But there's just as many thrills for the fans.

At this writing, Goodman has not yet hit town. Shaw has—but definitely. A stimulated audience of jitterbugs, musicians and sober students seemed to indicate that there'll be no checking this top-flight band that was unknown less than a year ago. He has the sock and dash necessary for commercial success in swing. The magic of his music made youngsters without the necessary $2.50 climb to the tenth floor Willard ballroom via fire escapes, window ledges and hair-raising devices that the harrassed management has not yet uncovered. It is true that the turnout was not overwhelming; but the band had to buck Lent, day-before-payday, insufficient promotion, Tuesday night and a tripled picket line.

As this column observed a couple of weks ago, Shaw's music, as such, has sacrificed its moving subtleties of last year for a top-heavy brass section guaranteed to shatter the windows of ballrooms of less than 50,000 cubic feet. Drummer Buddy Rich, phenomenal as he is with his breath-taking speed and Gibraltar solidity, is entirely too loud. Altogether, the band's freshness and spontaneity is giving way to the mechanical blasting that Goodman, at his worst, has found so profitable. Which reminds us that playing unpretentiously from the soul will never pull in the $2,000 and up that Shaw's group now gets for four hours work.

Home-town-girl Helen Forrest was very pleasing with her vocalizing through not half as entertaining or solid as the really hep Tony Pastor. As a showman, Artie's own appeal was like that of last week's mashed potatoes. He always seemed on the verge of a yawn. His clarinet lacked the sureness and bite of Goodman's. But Shaw's tone and feeling chilled and sparkled like clear, flowing, cold spring water. His notes broke through the stiffness of the other instruments into another world, just as the equally lucid cornet of Beiderbecke used to transcend the Whiteman backgrounds.

Record Briefs

Artie Shaw: "Rose Room" and "Alone Together" (Bluebird 10,148)—You might examine this typical waxing in the above light.

Chick Webb: "It's Foxy" and "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" (Dec. 2309); "'Taint What You Do" and "I Can't Stop Loving You" (Dec. 2310)—Ella Fitzgerald, current No. 1 swing singer, dominates these sides and shows good signs of keeping her title for some time to come. Her full, rugged attack with—at the same time—those subtle inflections with which she "squeezes" the ends of her phrases, gives a solid, titilating rock that's unapproachable by all but Mildred Bailey and Billie Holliday. Best example is "'Taint What You Do. It's How You Do It." which suggests how she gets such verve with so little effort.

Tommy Dorsey: "Hold Tight" and "Symphony in Riffs" (Vic. 26163); "This Night" and "Honolulu" (Vic. 26172)—There should be laws against others playing numbers identified with a given artist or team. "Hold Tight" means Andrews Sisters. Anyone else on this zany would be a let-down, except Gertrude Stein. Tommy's version misses the whacky spirit by an extra margin and the vocal is simply awful. The usual high standards on the other releases.

Clever Heidt Numbers

Horace Heidt: "If I Hadn't Met You" and "That Night" (Br. 8322); "Never Again" and "We've Gone a Long Way Together" (Br. 8316)—Clever, as always. Overarrranged, as always. You can miss those blood-curdling electric guitar introductions by placing the needle one-fifth of an inch from the beginning of the grooves.

John Kirby: "The Turf" and "Dawn on the Desert" (Vo. 4653)—Bassist Kirby, in between sessions with the Goodman Quintet, leads the best jam band in the business. "Turf" is solid and relaxed, with Billy Kyle sounding like Terry Wilson and Drummer O'Neil Spencer sounding like he ought to be 20 feet farther from the pick-up.

Hal Kemp: "A Heart of Stone" and "You've Got Me Crying Again" (Vic. 26165)—We're supposed to break out crying over this one. Bob Alden sings in his best bedside manner.

Concert to Honor Birthday of Bach

Commemorating the natal anniversary of Bach, a pragram of his compositions will be presented tomorrow evening in the Washington Chapel M. D. S., Sixteenth street and Columbia road. Vincent Slater, guest organist, will give program notes at 7:45 o'clock, and in the concert, which starts at 8, he will be assisted by Max C. Lloyd and David E. Tolman, violonists, and Edna C. Wheelwright, soprano. The program contains the D minor Toccata and Fugue, the A minor Prelude and Fugue, three Chorale-Preludes, the double violin concerto and the vocal aria, "My Heart Ever Faithful."

On Wednesday and Friday evenings at 8 the free recital series continues with D. Sterling Wheelwright at the console. The Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and a fantasia on familiar Schubert melodies will be heard Wednesday. On Friday evening Mrs. Wheelwright will sing Caldara's "'Soul of My Heart" and Stephen Foster's "I Dream of Jeanie;" organ numbers include Guilmant's first symphony and requested Beethoven selections.

Capital Choir to Sing At Grace Church

Under the direction of Jessie Masters, the National Capital Choir will be visiting singers in Grace Baptist Church at 7:45 this evening. The soloists are Irene Koehl, Louella Stockett, Howard Ludwig and Warren Adams. The following program is announced:

Marine Band Orchestra To Play Svendsen Piece

Johan Svendsen's Symphony No. 1 in D major is the major work on the program by the United States Marine Band Orchestra, under the direction of Capt. Taylor Branson, Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in Barracks Hall. The soloist of the evening, Albert Schoepper, will be heard in Ravel's "Tzigane" for violin and orchestra. Other compositions listed are:

Overture, "In Fruehling" (Karl Goldmark), Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkuere" (Wagner), "The Swan of Tuonela" (Sibelius), "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune" (Debussy).

Double Quartet Sings

A double quartet of male voices from the choir of St. Matthews' Church, under direction of Malton Boyce, is taking part in the performances of "The Third Cross," a Passion Play being given nightly through Saturday in Holy Cross Auditorium, West Virginia avenue and Neal street northeast, by the Catholic Players' Guild, directed by Paul Messink. The singers are William T. Hannon, Thomas K. Hannon, Thomas L. Costaggini, John B. Cullen, A. E. Willmett, John J. McMahon, Sidney Russell, F. P. Heartsill and H. M. Knowlton.

Felian Garzia to Play

Felian Garzia will give a piano recital, devoted entirely to Debussy, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening at the Arts Club, 2017 I street. The compositions listed are "Arabesques" in E major and G major, "Reverie," "Danseuses de Delphe," "Les collines d'Anacapri," "Des pas sur la neige," "Minstrels," "Serenade a la poupee," "Golliwog's Cakewalk," "Reflets dans l'eau," "Jardins sous la pluie," "Poissons d'or," "Voiles" and "L'Isle Joyeuse."

Chorus to Present St. Matthew Passion Tomorrow Night

Under the direction of Louis A. Potter, the Washington Choral Society will present Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in Washington Cathedral. The chorus of 200 will be assisted by an orchestra of 40 resident musicians, including members of the Department of Agriculture Orchestra, and augmented by woodwind players from the Philadelphia Orchestra.

C. E. Derbyshire will sing the barytone part of Peter and also the part of the high priest in the latter part of the work. David Manley and Wilfred Smith will divide the part of the evangelist; Sam Cotton will sing the words of Jesus; Harry Yeide will be heard as Pilate, and J. L. Stinson as Judas. The women soloists include Helen Howison, Ruby Potter, Mary Apple, Lottie Volkmer, Bertha Morgan, Madalynne Powell Cheatham and Florence Ludy.

Dr. Walter Bauer, director of the Department of Agriculture Orchestra, is personnel manager of orchestra, which is divided into two sections to constitute a double orchestra.

Ballet to Present Third Program

Under direction of Lisa Gardiner, the Washington National Ballet will present the third program in its current series, "Fridays and Saturdays at Nine," March 24 and 25 at the King-Smith Playhouse. Two members of the Washington Composers' Club have written music for this occasion. Mary Howe's "Fishers' Reel" and Robert Barrow's "Colors" will have premieres. "Paris By Gaslight," presented for the first time, also has music by a resident composer, Grace Shannon.

Miss Shannon will be at the piano for the performance of her ballet number; for the others the accompanists will be Madalyn Sheppard, pianist, and Gerta Urry, violinist. Jeanne Davidson, flutist of the Washington Civic Orchestra, will assist in "The Magic Flute." A Hungarian czardas will complete the program.

Trudi to Dance Here on Friday

Paul Schoop, brother of the Swiss dancing comedienne, Trudi Schoop, composed the music for "The Blonde Marie," which Trudi and her troupe of 20 dancers will present in the National Theater on Friday afternoon at 4.30. The choreographic comedy has eight scenes, and the score is played by two pianists: Lother Perl and Max Fickel. The plot centers on a chorus girl and her rise to prima donna in an operetta.

Trudi Schoop takes the title role, and among her capable young assistants are Katta Sterna, Otto Ulbricht, Meta Krahn, Edith Carola, Ralph Ray, Niels Bjorn Larsen, Marina Raae, Ellen Liy and Gitta Wallerstein. Reservations for the performance can be made at Worch's, 1110 G street, or at the theater boxoffice.

Pro Arte Quartet Plays Twice This Week

Under the provisions of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, the Pro Arte Quartet of Brussels will give this week the third and fourth concerts in its current series. On Thursday evening at 8:30 the program consists of quartets by Beethoven, Honegger and Mozart; on Saturday afternoon at 3:45 quartets by Debussy, Piston and Mozart will be played.

This series constitutes a repetition of the Pro Arte-Coolidge concerts given at their twenty-fifth anniversary festival in Brussels last May.

Stokowski Leads Symphony Here Tuesday Night

Leopold Stokowski will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra's last concert of the season in Constitution Hall on Tuesday night. The first half of the program consists of Stokowski's transcription of Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," and the "Feuerzauber" from "Die Walkuere."

'Dmitri Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, will be played for the first time here as the second half of the concert. The work was composed in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the U. S. Adult Education Group Compiles Directory

Washington Now Has Organization to Promote Training Facilities for Adults, and Plans To Make Information Available to All

By Elizabeth C. Draper,
Treasurer, D. C. Adult Education Association.

The growth of the adult education movement in the United States has been most encouraging in the last few years. The Federal Government, the several States, many cities and counties in the United States now give material aid to this work. It is definitely recognized as a most important phase of the community's educational program.

Washington is one of the cities most interested in this work, as evidenced by the election of Miss Maude Aiton, principal of the Americanization School, to the presidency of the adult education department of the National Education Association almost two years ago.

In order to encourage and promote adult education in Washington, through the co-operation of public and private educational authorities, a committee on organization called a meeting last June at the Americanization School. This committee included Miss Selma Borchardt, vice president, World Federation of Education Associations; Mrs. Florence Rogers and Henry Draper, supervising principal in the public schools; Hugh Smith, president, District Education Association; Miss Mary Dent, director, first Workers' Education College in District of Columbia; Miss Annie Keliher, elementary schools; Miss Ethel Summy, Teachers College; Mrs. Jeanette Kern, high schools, and Miss May Marsden, vocational schools.

377 Charter Members

The plan was to form an adult education association that would immediately affiliate with the National Education Association, especially with its adult education department. Such action took place at the first meeting, and through the efforts of those interested in the movement the Adult Education Association of Washington started with a membership of 77.

At that time W. E. Givens, executive secretary of the N. E. A., said: "I am happy to know that Washington is to have an Adult Education Association, affiliated with the N. E. A., to help carry on this important phase of eductaional work. This association can be of great service to the community by co-operating with school officials and the many civic organizations interested in this work."

In October the election of permanent officers took place, resulting in Dr. J. Orin Powers, president; Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Miss Mary Dent and Dr. Chester Williams, vice presidents; Mrs. George B. Galloway, corresponding secretary; James E. Cummings, recording secretary, and Mrs. Henry W. Draper, treasurer.

Aims Outlined

The purposes of the organization are to gather and disseminate information on all phases of adult education; to foster and promote adult education in Washington, D. C., and to co-operate with public and private agencies in Washington which are actively interested in this work.

In order to accomplish these objectives the executive council voted to compile a directory of educational and recreational opportunities in the District of Columbia. For several months this excellent and important piece of work has been in preparation under the guidance of Mrs. George B. Galloway, chairman of the committee on research, and now is almost completed. When printed the directory will be made available to the adult population of the Capital City, many of whom will be delighted as well as grateful to take advantage of opportunities for learning new vocations or for enjoying cultural and other leisure-time activities.

Any public spirited citizens interested in this civic project may join the Adult Education Association.

Sorority Sponsors Affair to Aid School's Expansion

Columbus University students thronged the school's moot court room St. Patrick's night for the dance sponsored by the Pi Chi Sorority for the benefit of the university's expansion program. Amount of the proceeds will be announced this week, according to the committee headed by Helen Ryan and aided by Jean Karp, Frances Basar, Eveline Lee, Nelle Holmes, Rita Walsh, Verna Flagg, Elizabeth Ryan, Betty McCartney nad Helen Dassinger.

March and April meetings of the Venetian Society will be devoted to discussions of the function of accountancy in business, Dean James D. Cushman announced.

John J. Byrne, of Lowell, Mass., a student in the junior college public speaking class, last week delivered a radio address consisting of extracts of a Senate speech made by Daniel Webster 101 years ago in which Webster derided the "prophets of destruction." Capt. Corley P. McDarment, professor of public speaking, announces that other students in the near future will make radio addresses as part of their course.

G. U. Glee Club Gives Campus Concert Today

Traditional Program Scheduled for 8:30 p. m. In Gaston Hall

The Georgetown University Glee Club, accompanied by the university orchestra, will present its traditional Mi-Careme concert tonight at 8:30 o'clock in Gaston Hall.

Dr. Edward P. Donovan, director, has arranged a diversified program for the evening. The songs will range from the lighter classics to the more solemn music of Tchaikovski and Lizst, and also will include several numbers dating back to the fifteenth century, which have become traditional with college choral groups.

The Mi-Careme concert is usually the only program rendered by the glee club at the Hilltop, although this year it will take part in the sesquicentennial celebration opening May 28. The concert will be attended by prominent invited guests as well as many of the local alumni.

The newly organized orchestra of the university, led by Marlin S. Reichley, of the Foreign Service School, will accompany the glee club tonight. The orchestra made its first appearance at the recent Mask and Bauble Club play contest and was enthusiastically received.

The glee club is making arrangements to appear in two concerts in New York City. It will present a joint concert with the Marymount School girl's choir at Hotel Biltmore on April 21. The preceding evening the Georgetown group will give a recital at Manhattanville College.

Members of the glee club include the following students from Washington: Joseph M. Moran, John T. Burns, A. S. Fennell, jr., George P. George, Michel M. Healy and George H. O'Connor, jr. The Rev. Arthur A. Coniff, S. J. is moderator.

St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia drew a member of the Georgetown faculty last week as its new president, The Rev. Thomas L. Love, S. J., chairman and head of the department of physics in the graduate school, assumed the presidency of the college last Sunday.

Father Love joined the Georgetown faculty at the opening of the present academic year. He previously had served 11 years as professor of physics at Loyola College. St. Joseph's College and Georgetown have frequently exchanged officials and professors for many years.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

THIS is the fourth in a series of articles on the new Federal personnel directors who compose the Council of Personnel Administration established by the President.

Roy Hendrickson, director of personnel in the Agriculture Department, is an artist in the manipulations of an interview. On the supplying end in these cases, Hendrickson—true, possibly, to his first nature—talks to the newspaperman from the newspaperman's point of view. He omits all the frills and embroideries that newspapermen picturesquely refer to as hog-wash, telling what he knows the newspaperman will want and can use.

This is because Hendrickson once was a newspaperman himself and remembers, perhaps, the pains he has had in talking around six forests to get one acorn shaken down. So yesterday Henderickson, a stout man with a sort of ease about himself and a vast interest in the person who is interviewing him, took the matter chronologically:

He came up on a farm in Iowa, and was schooled at St. Olaf College in Minnesota. This was whisked by, because it hasn't much to do with Agriculture Department personnel. In Minneapolis, he was manager for the Associated Press Bureau; he was sent to Washington with the A. P. and concentrated on the farm news angles. Then he went to the Division of Subsistence Homesteads under the Interior Department; went later to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as director of economic information. But the turn had been toward personnel problems through an inclination.

Opportunity came when they asked him to serve on committees looking into personnel affairs, and activity was actually begun when he became an associate of Dr. W. W. Stockberger, whom he was to succeed as personnel director last June. But before he became director of personnel, Hendrickson had definitely begun a reshaping of personnel policies, particularly in the field of employe grievances.

A splash was made of it last summer, when Agriculture announced the formulation of an appeals procedure. It was widely commented upon, some holding that the elaborate machinery was workable, others thinking differently. Hendrickson, who set it at work, thinks it has been satisfactory.

However it has worked, it was not a plan that was concocted before breakfast. Hendrickson went out and studied grievance procedures in industry; he investigated all attempts made in that direction in the Government. He got the immediate impression, which has lingered, that much personnel difficulty originates out of an ignorance on the part of employes of personnel policies.

He considered then that personnel practices and policies, as understood by the officials, should be made clear and put into concise writing for the guidance of the employes. There won't be much difficulty when both sides understand things identically, he believes. And something else:

He had an eye for the new comers to the big department. From all the stretch of America they came for jobs and for weeks many wandered about, "mystified," as Hendrickson puts it. Some of them had little idea of what the department was doing. Hendrickson right now is working on this problem, trying to speed up the breaking-in processes. He has an idea for meetings which newcomers could attend and through informal lectures and otherwise be acquainted with their surroundings. This seems like good business—and also a very human thing to do.

He thinks that the department, from the top down, is in favor of merit employes. And he has the idea—a fundamental one—that a way to avoid personnel difficulties is to place the right man in the job at the very beginning. He likes stiff competition for jobs. Here it might be said that he took it the hard way himself—by examination.

Concerning his own work, he wants the personnel office to be "an integral part of the organization." He does not see its function as applying to any one office, which may have a large force, but to every corner of the big department. The ideal of good personnel practices should not be segregated, "but should permeate the whole establishment," he thinks.

He wants promotions-from-within and he wants the department to attract men and women who will come with the intention of making a career there. He wants them to work faithfully for the department—something he does himself.

Readers' School Forum

By Helen Drake

Each week this column will present representative answers of Washington citizens to a problem confronting students, parents of students, or teachers of students. Readers are invited to send in question they'd like answered to The Post Education Editor. Today's question is:

Do you believe homework is essential to a thorough education?

JOHN WILLCOX, 5007 Illinois avenue northwest, packer at department store, "Yes. In the classroom a student never has enough time to absorb all the knowledge given him and, therefore, home study is absolutely essential if the facts are to be remembered. Doing homework also helps a student to concentrate efficiently and it develops his mind considerably."

SADIE BROWN, 1408 Girard street northwest, salesgirl: "If a student prepares his studies at home he is better able to grasp each new lesson thoroughly and he becomes more acquainted with the subjects being studied. It tends also to keep a person actively occupied and is progressive for him."

JOHN MURPHY, 301 Spring avenue, Takoma Park, Md., parking lot attendant: "I am definitely against all homework. The teachers should strive to give a complete lesson each day, instead of carrying it on from day to day. Knowledge can be acquired only when taught and not later when the student is physically and mentally tired. Probably 50 per cent of the students going to school today are bored not only with homework, but with school work as well, so that I believe a more definite trend toward making education a more interesting way of learning to work and live should be initiated into the school system. Most students don't want to worry about homework after they leave school because they desire more time for leisure and recreation."

Army and Navy Chat

Stark's Selection May Set Precedent

By J. G. N.

Well, the big slate is out and don't say we didn't tell you. Admiral Stark's selection for the top job as a "dark horse" was forecast on this page some weeks back. We are still predicting that the President will follow a like course and jump down among the brigadier generals in choosing a new Chief of Staff of the Army to succeed Gen. Craig this summer. Craig's deputy, Brig. Gen. George Marshall, leads on our winter books. Capt. Towers' appointment as chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics was welcome news for naval aviation. His failure of selection last fall was a blow to the morale of the Navy's fliers, who saw in the selection's board action, a forecast of their own fate. It appeared to them that the officer with much experience in command of ships and who entered aviation late in life had the definite edge over the old-time fliers in selection for flag rank. Such an attitude would be bound in time to revive sentiment for a separate air force, which never before gained much headway in the Navy, although at one time strong in the Army Air Corps. Of course, his appointment to the bureau post is not the same as selection for permanent flag rank, and the flying officers, and others, hope he will be "picked up" by this year's board.

MARSHALL

Incidentally, we are informed that Capt. Towers may serve his full four-year term as chief of bureau, even if not selected for permanent flag rank next December. Although thereafter ineligible for line promotion and under the selection law sheduled for forcible retirement the following June, it is said that his appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate will intervene to nullify the general retirement statute. Rear Admiral Walter B. Woodson, judge advocate general of the Navy, is in a like situation. No decision has been rendered as yet by the latter's office on the point, however.

Roman Catholics in the armed services—and those of other faiths as well—will be interested to learn that the Vatican is considering the establishment of a military diocese in the United States with the appointment of a military bishop for the Army and Navy who would have authority over all Catholic chaplains. The principal reason behind the proposal is that Church law requires every priest to obtain authority from the bishop of his diocese before administering the sacraments. This resulted in considerable confusion during the World War, with chaplains moving about frequently and leaving for overseas on a moment's notice. Seven months after America's entrance into the war, Patrick Cardinal Hayes, who was then an auxiliary bishop, was created bishop of the Army and Navy. This, however, was discontinued with the coming of peace. It is interesting to note, however, that Italy obtained such a diocese in 1928, and Germany three years ago. One objection to the move is that the office would have to be supported by Army and Navy members of the Catholic faith. In this connection, it has been suggested that some existing diocese be given additional jurisdiction over the armed services. If the Vatican approves the plan, it is considered likely that some of the Protestant churches will follow suit.

Random fire—The Coast Guard hopes to catch up with the other armed services in the matter of flag and general officers. It is asking Congress for three rear admirals (two more than at present), and can point to the fact that the Marine Corps with only about twice as many officers, has 14 generals . . . West Pointers take notice—A decision on the War Department plan to ban lieutenants from marrying during their first three years of service will probably be reached by the House Military Affairs Committee at its meeting on Tuesday . . . The group will probably also pass on the bill to retire Capt. George Adamson, Gen. Pershing's secretary, with the rank of colonel. Already approved by the Senate and endorsed by the War Department, Bureau of Budget and, of course, "Black-Jack" himself, the measure will probably be passed.

America's New Cargo Ships to Be Named After Famous Yankee Clippers; First One Takes to Water Next Month

Early Merchant Vessels To Be 'Reborn' in New MerchantmenSoon To Ply Trade Routes

By J. Gilbert Norris.

A new fleet of clipper ships may soon restore the glories of its "golden age" to America's merchant marine.

The first cargo ship to be laid down in the United States in nearly two decades will come off the ways next month, to be followed by 19 others at short intervals. Scheduled to replace aged merchantmen on the world's trade routes and perhaps carve new paths for American shipping, the ships are to be fittingly named for the famous Yankee clippers of 100 years ago.

It was during the 1840's and 1850's that the clipper ships made the young republic an important seapower, second to none in the speed of its ships and the breadth of its commerce. Designed by a New England shipbuilder named Donald McKay, the clipper ships were the outstanding development of the day of wooden ships and spreading sail.

Leadership Lost

The opening of the Suez Canal, together with the advent of iron ships and steam propulsion lost to the United States its foremost position in the maritime world, but the era of the clipper ships, once called the "greatest seafaring adventure the world has ever known," still remains a dream and a challenge to those who "follow the sea."

In the fifties, 90 per cent of American foreign trade was carried in American bottoms. Today, foreign ships carry more than 70 per cent. Obviously, Rear Admiral Emory S. ("Jerry") Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, has a job ahead of him, if the much hoped for shipping renaissance is to be fulfilled. A good start has been made, however.

The largest liner ever laid down in the United States is under construction at Newport News, Va. It is the S. S. America, which will enter the service of the United States Lines next spring. Last year the commission laid down an average of one ship a week in its rebuilding program, which involves construction of 50 ships a year for ten years.

New Boats Needed

As the Nation's aging merchant fleet, almost all of World War origin, will be obsolete by 1942, the need for the new construction is apparent.

The first of the new freighters is to be launched at the Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Chester, Pa., on April 22. It will be named for the creator of the clipper ships of long ago, the Donald McKay. And in the hope that these new Yankee sailormen will equal the record of their famous forbears, the others will be named for old-time clippers.

These models of American cargo ships, old and new, were photographed in the American Maritime Commission offices. At right, Miss Jeannette Ray inspects a model of one of the new vessels, which will take their names from the famous Yankee clippers that sailed the seas 100 years ago. One of those early vessels, the Flying Cloud, is shown below

Post Staff Photos.

One will be christened the Flying Cloud, best known of the sailing ships. Another will be named the Lightning, fastest of the clippers, which set a record of 436 nautical miles in 24 hours—about 19 knots. Still another will be known as the Nightingale, after the pioneer in the Australian trade, which sailed every ocean in a career of 42 years.

Rainbow Reborn

The first of the "extreme" clippers, the Rainbow, will be reborn in one of the new ships. Others will be known as Stag Hound, Shooting Star, Flying Fish, Swordfish, Surprise, Comet, Raven, Challenge, Northern Light, Sweepstakes, Sea Witch, Hornet, Twilight, Sea Serpent and Meteor.

The new vessels will have a speed of 15½ knots, which will make them 50 per cent faster than the majority of American merchant vessels now in service. Each will be 435 feet long, 63 feet in breadth, with a displacement of 13,900 tons, a dead weight of 9,291 tons and a cruising radius of 13,000.

Special features making them valuable to the Navy in time of war are built into the craft. Commodious accommodations for the officers and crew of 42 are provided. All are of a standard developed by the technical staff of the commission after consultation with shipbuilders and operators.

20 Boats Assigned

The 20 "C-2s," as they are designated, have been allocated to four different trade routes. Three will go into service on runs from north Atlantic ports to the west coast of South America. Six others will go into service from north Atlantic ports to Scandinavian and Baltic Sea ports. Six more will run from north Atlantic ports to the English Channel, east coast of the United Kingdom and German North Sea ports.

The last five have been allocated to routes running from north Atlantic ports to the Red Sea, Persian Gulf and Indian ports via the Suez Canal, to Australia and New Zealand via the Panama Canal, and to Far Eastern ports via the Panama Canal.

The commission has other ships under way, some tankers, cargo ships, combination vessels, with others projected, but seafaring men, being superstitious, wonder if giving the 20 new C-2s the names of the old clippers might not be the good omen which the American merchant marine has needed lo these 90 years.

Col. Dravo's Action Discredits Notion Officers Fight in Safety

Adjutant General of D. C. National Guard Received Distinguished Service Cross For Leading Regiment in Attack

By Joseph D. Cooper.

[This is another sketch in the series on District military officers.]

The popular notion about officers' "safety behind the lines" is thoroughly discredited by the case of Col. Charles A. Dravo, adjutant general, District National Guard.

When Gen. John J. Pershing read the citation on the occasion of awarding Col. Dravo the Distinguished Service Cross overseas, he cried, "Charlie Dravo! Your father ought to be proud of you!" Gen. Pershings and Col. Edward E. Dravo, U. S. A., retired, saw service together in the Sixth Cavalry.

The Citation Reads

"Leading the front line of his regiment throughout the entire attack, Col. Dravo was constantly under machine-gun fire and incessant artillery fire. Having been ordered to advance, he personally formed his lines for attack, despite the fact that for 2 hours he had labored without rest or relief, and led his command forward in the face of fiercest fire, encountering and subduing the enemy after a hand-to-hand struggle."

COL. DRAVO

On Army Assignment

As Adjutant General, Col. Dravo is the Chief of Staff under Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commanding officer, District National Guard. He is assigned from the Army. Since his assignment here he has taken an unusually active interest in local Guard affairs. Before this tour of duty he was in command of the Eighth Infantry at Fort Moultrie, S. C.

During the war, after serving as division machine-gun officer, he was placed in command of the 165th Infantry in which capacity he earned his citation, which was followed with the Croix de Guerre with Palm and the Legion of Honor. At St. Mihiel he was wounded in action, for which he was awarded the Order of the Purple Heart.

Recently the 165th Infantry, New York National Guard, honored him by commissioning an artist to come to Washington to paint the Colonel's portrait. It is interesting t note that this artist was the only one to paint the portrait of Edward, Duke of Windsor, while he was King.

Rainses Mink for Hobby

A recent hobby of Col. Dravo has cultivated is the raising of mink on land owned by his father near Annapolis, where he now lives. Col. Dravo is married to the former Cornelia Johnson, daughter of Gen. Evan M. Johnson. His two sons, Charles A., jr., and Edward J. Dravo, are both in Devitt's Prep. School, both hoping to some day enter West Point and carry n the military tradition of the family.

Col. Dravo was born in Arizona in 1880. He was appointed to the Army from Pennsylvania, by civilian competition. He is on the eligible list of the General Staff Corps and is also a graduate of the Command and General Staff School, the Army Signal School and the Infantry School Advanced Course.

Although he has seen various types of service, basically, he says, "I am just a doughboy!"

Holmes Named Guard Delegate

Second Lieut. Wendell Holmes, State staff, District National Guard, will represent that organization at the selective service conference at the Army Medical Center, March 28 through April 8, Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox announced yesterday.

The conference deals with the problems of personnel procurement, particularly as applied to the needs of the Army in the event of mobilization for emergency. The heads of the various armed forces, or their representatives, will attend.

Discussion on Hawaii

Military intelligence procedure in America's "Gibraltar of the Pacific"—Hawaii—will be discussed Wednesday night at local reserve headquarters in the Munitions Building.

Reservists Map Review For Capt. Clay

Navy Program Is Arranged for March 28 At Armory Here

Washington Naval Reservists will hold a review and inspection in honor of Capt. Alfred T. Clay, U. S. N., on March 28. Capt. Clay, who is director of Naval Reserve affairs in this area and also inspector of the First Battalion, U. S. N. R., will be detached from the Navy Yard April 1.

Although Capt. Clay has only been on duty with the First Battalion for a short time, he has been a popular officer with the battalion. Much of the credit for the high performance made by local reservists on their inspection last month is due to the assistance and instruction of Capt. Clay, battalion officers said last week.

The ceremonial review will be at the Naval Reserve Armory at the Navy Yard and Capt. Clay will receive full naval honors due an officer of his rank. The three organized divisions of the battalion will take part in the inspection.

The Washington Chapter of the Naval Reserve Officers' Association will meet at the Navy Yard Thursday night to elect officers for the coming year. Lieut. F. W. Lemly is the retiring president.

Ensign Jack Watson, Supply Corps, has reported for duty with the battalion and has been assigned to the staff of the provisional division.

The Bridge Deck

The East and West players of today's deal got all tangled up in the "cams, cogs, gadgets and thingamabobs," netting both the winner and runner-up teams of the recent Eastern Goldman pair championship a 500-point penalty reward.

Against aggressive, dynamic bidder, Bred D. Kaplan, and his partner, Harold Ziman, the winners, East used the over-call of the opponent's suit gadget to reopen the bidding, which forced the contract beyond his control.

Against Charles Lockridge and M. D. Maier, of the Four Aces, also no Milquetoasts when it comes to bidding, the East player again chose the hazardous course of reopening the bidding, confusing his partner and winding up doubled at a much too high contract.

The bidding which occurred at Kaplan's table is given in today's box. What happened when Lockridge and his partner played the hand follows:

Bridge

By Marian H. Barre

In 1938 when the city of Richmond held its first annual open bridge championships players from the District of Columbia seized half the spoils, this year the invaders boosted the record, capturing three out of four titles. The tournament was held at the John Marshall Hotel in the Old Dominion capital last week-end.

On Friday afternoon, playing in the first event on the program Mrs. Irene Surguy and Mrs. C. W. ("Fritzie") Boyce won the women's championship, scoring a 67-per-cent game in a field of 28 pairs. The win gave Mrs. Surguy her first master point, heretofore she has been identified with the rubber bridge group. Mrs. Boyce is a national master player, having completed her qualifications within the past month in the Norfolk Masters' Pairs she now regards the State of Virginia as her happy hunting ground.

The Richmond tournament also initiated another young Washingtonian in the ranks of master point holders. Miss Mabel Tobin won her first major event playing with Edgar A. Perkins in the mixed pair contest. Fifty-six pairs were entered in this game, making the largest field in any event. Miss Tobin's duplicate experience has been gained within the past year. Perkins is a frequent winner both at home and abroad. After her win in the afternoon Mrs. Surguy placed third in the mixed game, paired with Edward Jaffe. The defending champions, Mrs. C. W. Zimmer and Col. E. B. Gray, put up a spirited but unsuccessful defense of their title.

The Washington team of Leroy Thurtell, E. B. Conolly, E. A. Perkins and Gene Herman, with Jaffe as an alternate, defeated the Cleveland team captained by Alvin Landy in an eight-board play-off. Both teams had won 40 boards during two sessions of play. Thurtell's line-up won a decisive victory of six out of eight matches. Landy played Harry Feinberg, A. S. Goldsmith and George F. Ball. The team was en route to Hollywood, Fla., for the Southeastern regional championships.

Thurtell and Herman in third place made the best local showing in the only championship Washington failed to capture, the game for open pairs. It was won by Mrs. R. E. Jennell and Miss Vivian Owen, both of Norfolk, Va. Four other Capital partnerships appeared among the ten best pairs, while the fortunes of war eliminated several others after the qualifying round. Between 40 and 50 local players took part in the Richmond tournament. A spirit of true Southern hospitality endeared their Virginia hosts to our contingent last year. The 1939 success was the natural follow-up. A close kinship now exists between the two bridge leagues.

Bridge had a tropical setting last week when the Southeastern championships were played at Hollywood Beach in Florida. The tournament began on March 16 and is being concluded tonight. There are no District representatives in the game this year since the Washington Bridge League did not conduct a qualifying round. In 1938 it held a "Hollywood Special" in which the winners obtained a free trip to Florida. W. M. McIntyre and Leroy Thurtell captured this prize, later they played on the foursome that won the Hollywood team championship. The trophy will go by default this season. Any local players now in Hollywood are competing on their own and not as delegates from the District league.

The seven-day period from March 19 to March 25 is unique because it contains no tournaments, addicts to "the boards" must content themselves with local games, of which there are legion. But on the afternoon of March 31 the whistle will blow again to start the Old Dominion. It will be held in the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria, beginning on Friday and ending on Sunday evening. The tournament will be managed by R. E. Needham and is under the sponsorship of the North American Bridge Association.

Competition for the second Clifford Challenge Cup began last Wednesday evening in the Washington Bridge League game at the Shoreham Hotel with 13 teams meeting in a match to determine the temporary custodians of the trophy.

The team of Louis Newman, John Mothershed, Al Roth and Joe Brotman won 18½ matches for a one-board lead over Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred t. Aubins, Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh, and Lewis Tubbs. As the rules of the contest provide that the first priority round shall be played between the teams in second and third place, the St. Aubin quartet will meet Tom Hamlin, E. B. Conolly, Leroy Thurtell, and Gene Herman at the next league game, the winners emerging with the right to challenge the Newman team. In the event that either team fails to play in the priority, the privilege reverts to the fourth-place line-up of Commander W. A. Corley, Dr. C. C. McDonnell, F. M. Lake, and D. C. Elliott.

Teams entered in the Clifford game comprised the best bridge talent in the Capital. With the exception of the Lemon team personnel all local giants were in action. The Lemons won the first Clifford trophy after a neck-to-neck race with Thurtell. Col. E. B. Clifford, donor of both cups that bear his name, played in the match. He was paired with I. H. York and teamed with Col. E. C. Wallington and Capt. J. R. Sheer.

The Arlington team continued in the lead of the Federal Bridge League after the game of March 7, at Wardman Park Hotel, with the Rangers close behind and the Shufflers showing an imposing average. The Shufflers also won their section and one pair top. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Granger turning in the winning score for that team, while Mrs. Helen Golden and Mrs. Gladys Myers won the north-south honors for the Allies.

Redskins carried Section B, splitting pair tops with the Stags. The winning pairs were M. Kessler and L. Fruitman and W. C. Fewell and F. Shankle. The biggest win of the evening, 20 matches out of 25, was made in Section C by the Kegh foursome that also captured both pair tops. The Kegh team is formed by Miss Paris Keener, Dr. Emily Grewe, Miss Grace Eaton and Miss Margaret Hobbs.

The Association of American Playing Card Manufacturers is making a survey of bridge players regarding the proposed changes in the contract bridge rules as announced in December by the National Laws committee of the A. C. B. L. If adopted the new laws will go into effect January 1, 1940. To obtain a census of opinion the association asks the following questions.

Do you favor—

1. Making all suits (except no trump) of one value—30 points pe rtrick (the rank of suits as at present for bidding purposes)?

2. Establishing a sub-slam bonus for bidding and making 5 tricks (grand and little slams to remain as at present)?

3. Creating an additional penalty for being set 5 tricks or more, in order to discourage sacrifice bids?

Do you think that—

These changes are necessary? That they simplify, or complicate the game?

That they are more important to tournament or to amateur players?

Failure to receive this question-new laws. The manufacturers are if they have decided opinions on the naire should not keep players silent anxious for replies. So write out the questions, answer yes or no, and mail letters to the Association. 420 Lexington avenue, New York, N. Y.

The 1939 Vanderbilt Cup National Knockout Team-of-Four Championship will be held at the Shelton Hotel, New York City, during the week starting April 17. Camera Angles

By Arthur Ellis

We have it from an unimpeachable source that spring is definitely here. Our source insists that you can throw out your calendars and your pet theory about robins and such because John Kabel, famed pictorialist, and harbinger of spring was in town last week.

We were told that the veteran camera artist, whose studio is the great outdoors, made his annual appearance showing his usual remarkable prints from negatives made in the Far West, Alaska and Guatemala.

Kabel in his long career has produced some of the most beautiful photographs of scenic subjects ever captured on film. This dean of pictorialists has pictured the great forests, ranges and trails of the West with a most amazing clarity and detail. With flawless composition he handles great forests of towering trees and endless trails with the sensitiveness and delicacy of a miniature artist.

Professional cameramen working with highly sensitized materials are often beset with heartbreaking accidents but a story tolo to us about Kabel tops anything we have ever heard.

In the spring of 1938 Kabel journeyed through California and Oregon photographing scenes of eye-filling beauty and accomplishing some of the most important work of his long years with the camera. On his return to his native Dayton, Ohio, the negatives were carefully packed for shipment to Chicago where they were to be developed by a commercial laboratory. The negatives were insured for $750. After noting the high value of the package the railway express company placed it in a safe of an express car.

After development upon delivery in Chicago, a long-distance call to Mr. Kabel informed him that every negative was fogged. Months of work and considerable expense—all lost.

Immediately railroad detectives and the express company began an investigation to find out just how the negatives were fogged in transit. After months of investigation they had the solution—it was learned a shipment of radium was in transit on the same car and in the same safe with Mr. Kabel's negatives!

Payment of the claim by Mr. Kabel was made promptly.

One of the most dramatic, fascinating and interesting films dealing with the story of photography itself will soon be available for showings before District camera clubs. It is the five-reel motion picture, "Highlights and Shadows," produced by Dr. J. S. Watson, jr., in co-operation with the research laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Co.

When this writer had the pleasure of seeing this film some months ago we wrote that we sat spellbound as the story of photography unfolded before us, revealing an industry that has grown to a position of utmost importance in the world today affecting the lives of people in every part of the globe. Certainly no photographer, professional or amateur, can afford to miss the opportunity of seeing this film.

The film is available on 16mm. film, 2,000 feet, running time 55 minutes. It is also available in 35mm. width.

A preview of "Highlights and Shadows" will be held at the Eastman Kodak store here Wednesday night.

When B. A. Hewins, manager of the Eastman Kodak store, told us about the plan for the showing of the film, he said:

"For several years we had had innumerable requests for a film of this nature, but we have been unable to meet the demand. Now arrangements can be made for the presentation of "Highlights and Shadows" where audiences of 50 or more persons are assured."

Photographs by the famed pioneer cameramen of the Hayden and Powell Expedition, Hillers, Jackson and Carkhuff, from the files of the United States Geological Survey will be featured in the special invitation section at the Junior League's fourth annual photographic show.

The show will be judged by Dr. Leicester B. Holland, Roy Stryker, Thomas McAvoy and Prentiss Taylor and will be held April 2 to 14 at the Junior League, 2001 Massachusetts avenue. Entries must be submitted by March 29. Rules for the exhibit may be obtained from any local photographic shop.

The Arlington Camera Club, which has come a long way in a short time under the capable direction of Mary Eleanor Browning, will exhibit work of its members in the Smithsonian Arts and Industries Building during the month of April.

Prints for this show will be chosen this Thursday night at a meeting of the club by three judges, Ernest L. Crandall, Fred Doudna and Laurence E. Rubel. Club members will choose one of their prints which will go into the show. They will be allowed to submit six more prints to the judges. Members of the Washington-Lee High School Camera Club have been invited to sit in on the judging.

Speaking of the Arlington Camera Club, they will sponsor the showing of the Royal Photographic Society Salon at the National Museum from April 4 to 15. This show was brought to this country by the Oval Table Society and is being shown in most of the large cities of the United States.

"Interesting showings can result only when good film, well arranged is presented. The instructions of the projector manufacturer should be followed to get the best results from the machine. Use a firm projector stand for steadiness and lessen noise by placing the machine on a rubber or felt pad. Under no circumstance should film which has not been properly edited be shown. White leader and black trailer strips on the film prevent the blinding flash on the screen at the end of a film. Professional effects may be gained by the use of a dimmer switch to lower and raise the lights in the room at the beginning and end of the show. Sound effects enhance the presentation, whether limited to music or permitting a running commentary by use of a microphone," Joseph Grawler told the Washington 8mm. Movie Club at their monthly meeting at the Washington Hotel.

Members displayed useful and ingenious "gadgets," outstanding among these was a 16-inch lens for use on an 8mm. movie camera. Close-ups of the Capitol dome were taken from the Virginia end of the Memorial Bridge with this lens.

Prints by Peggy Knowles which have been showing at Kinsman's, 1320 F street northwest, will continue on exhibit until Thursday. The photographs by this pupil of Mortensen have attracted city-wide attention and favorable comment has been heard from the town's leading photographic authorities.

The recently organized Skyline Camera Club now numbers 22 members in the vicinity of the Shenandoah Valley. Officers are E. Werner, president; Frank Ballenger, vice president; John Leonard, second vice president, and Lamont Lannae, secretary-treasurer.

Winners in the last print competition were Dr. R. M. Hoffman, Frank Ballenger, Erlo Warnke, Mrs. John Leonard and L. Lamont Lannae.

It will probably be several months before retail distribution of that one solution fixer-developer, Monobath, gets under way but local camera club officers are being tempted with a so-called predistribution offer so that the laboratories distributing the product can get the reaction of the amateur enthusiasts.

We read through a little booklet called "The Story of Monobath" and you might be interested to know that:

It comes in three types—contact, or standard grain; salon type, or fine grain, and mural type, or very fine grain.

It is not greatly affected by temperature. It is supposed to work at temperatures as low as 70 degrees or as high as 80 degrees.

You cannot overdevelop an emulsion. You can leave the film in the bath for hours after the processing is complete without harm.

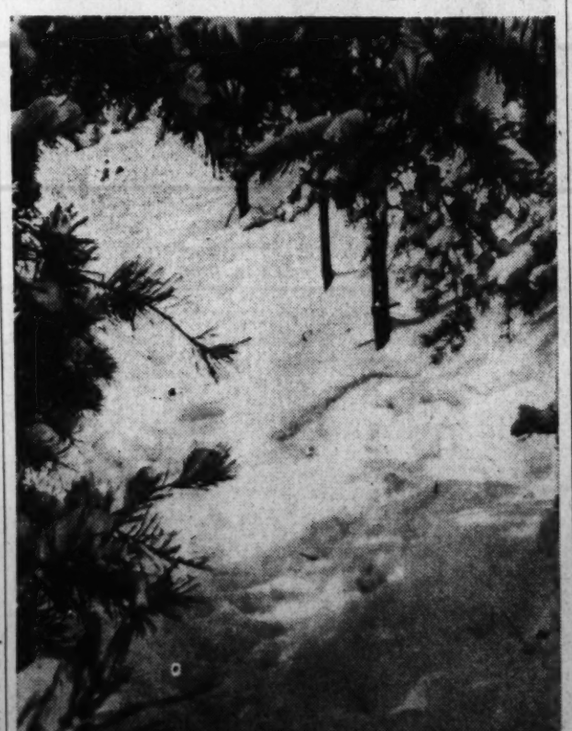
Agitation is very important. Use of an electric or mechanical agitator is recommended.

An automatic chemical cycle is what prevents overdevelopment and insures uniform densities. One single grain may still be developing while an adjoining grain already has been developed and completely fixed.

Tests made prove that negatives exposed at normal are not much different from those exposed at four times normal.

After developing several rolls in Monobath a silver sludge will appear in the bottom of the tank. The solution is then supposed to be syphoned.

Of course we only read these things and we don't know of anyone that has used this product but if you have let's hear about it and we'll pass it on.



This snow scene by Frank Ballenger took first prize in the pictorial class in the recent Skyland Camera Club print competition

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler

The second round of the District championship tourney played last Saturday at the quarters of the Social Chess Divan, saw Vladimir Sournin and H A. Rousseau emerge tied for the lead. Sournin, the present champion, played accurately to defeat Joseph Scribante in 53 moves, while Rousseau scored over Kenneth Stubbs in 59 moves by reason of excellent end-game technique. Ariel

Mengarini achieved a minor upset by winning a titanic 85-move fray against Capital City Champion D. H. Mugridge. The youngster's play was aggressive throughout, but he twice missed opportunities for an earlier victory. Stuart Wagman, Chess Divan's 19-year-old star, issued warning of his prowess by drawing an exceedingly complicated game with M. C. Stark after 43 moves. R. A. Hostler, a freshman at George Washington University, ended brilliantly against the veteran E. M. Knapp after trailing by a pawn in the earlier stages. The score of this exciting contest appears below. The standings:

Player	W.	L.	Player	W.	L.
Rousseau	2	0	Mugridge	1	1
Sournin	2	0	Knapp	½	1½
Stark	1½	½	Stubbs	½	1½
Hostler	1	1	Wagman	½	1½
Mengarini	1	1	Scribante	0	2

Play in round 2 was under the jurisdiction of referees M. L. Kessler and H. W. Horn. Round 3, with C. W. Stark and E. W. Kunkle in charge, shifted to the Capital City Club and was unfinished at a late hour last night. The fourth round will be played at the Social Chess Lounge, Parkside Hotel, next Saturday, and spectators are invited. A close race for titular honors is presaged by the fact that thus early in the contest nine of the entrants have broken into the scoring column.

En Passant

The Paul Morphy Chess Club will hold a business meeting on March 23 at 8 o'clock at the club's quarters, 1508 Fourteenth street northwest.

The annual election of officers at the Capital City Club resulted in the following selections: C. W. Stark, president; H. S. Gay, vice president; T. J. Buford, secretary-treasurer; P. W. Shepard, bridge director; D. H. Mugridge, chess director, and M. C. Stark and W. H. Mutchler, directors.

United States Champion Reshevsky's exhibition at the Jewish Community Center last Thursday was conducted under the joint auspices of that organization, W. K. Wimsatt and I. S. Turover.

L. N. Ponce, former District champion, leaves the local scene, to the regret of his many friends, and his future chess activities will occur in New York City where he will continue in the diplomatic service of the Ecuadorian government's staff.

Local chess fandom is deeply mourning the passing of its dean of players, Jacob Frech. Mr. Frech died last Sunday, at the age of 91, and had been in failing health for upwards of four years. Born May 2, 1847, Mr. Frech entered the employ of the War Department in his early youth and retired, at the age of 82, while chief clerk of the adjutant general's office. He was actively associated with District chess affairs since 1862, and until 1935 was one of The Post's most faithful and accurate solvers of problems. Twice, in international correspondence play, he astounded the chess world with announced mates in 19 and 39 moves, an all-time record.

Solutions to Problems

Problem No. 813, pretty three-mover by W. B. Mundelle, yields to Kt-K3. Today solvers are favored by another composition of Burney M. Marshall, famous Louisiana problemist, whose offering embodies a "cross-pin" which should prove of interest. Incidentally, it is Mr. Marshall's 497th problem, which indicates a prolific mind.

Stamps

The procession of new stamps keeps on and on, and the new commemoratives the United States are issuing add to the gaiety of the times. The new 3-cent commemorating stamp in honor of the New York World's Fair will be placed on first-day sale in New York City on April 1. Covers will be canceled first-day, not to exceed ten to any one person, all orders to be sent to the Postmaster of New York City. The Post-office Department officials request that envelope sizes be limited to 3 by 6 inches. The New York Fair stamp will be printed by rotary press, arranged vertically, and purple in color. There will be a special cachet applied to all letters and post cards dispatched from the fair, as follows: "World's Fair Station, New York, N. Y."

The three-cent commemorative honoring the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of George Washington taking the oath of office in New York City will be first-day in New York City on April 30.

Senator Sheppard of Texas has introduced a joint resolution in the Senate that a special series of three-cent postage stamps be issued to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, "one of our greatest pioneer leaders for advancement of women and protection of the home."

Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi, has introduced in the House of Representatives a bill that a series of postage stamps be issued commemorative of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, 1539—1542.

Representative Paul Brown, of Georgia, has introduced in the House a joint resolution for a special stamp honoring the services of Thomas E. Watson, "in the origination of the rural free delivery service."

Representative Lex Green, of Florida, has introduced a joint resolution in the House requesting a three-cent commemorative postage stamp on the seventy-fifth anniversary of the death of Stephen Foster, the author and composer of American folk songs.

Representative Milton A. Romjue, of Missouri, has introduced in the House a joint resolution providing for the issuance of four special postage stamps of 1 cent, 2 cents, 3 cents and 5 cents in honor of the seventh world's poultry congress and exposition to be held in the United States this year.

The Postmaster General of Great Britain has announced two new values of the current series of postage stamps. The two stamps were placed on sale at British postoffices on February 27, the values being 7d and 8d.

Both stamps are similar to the current King George VI series and are like the values ½d to 6d already issued. The stamps are printed in photogravure. The design is the work of Edmund Dulac and consists of the head of His Majesty in the center of the stamp against a dark background of hexagonal shape. A hexagonal frame of lighter shade surrounds this background and includes as a portion of the decoration, a crown placed directly above the head, the denomination of the stamp in words beneath the head. The words "Postage Revenue" appear at the sides. In the corners of the stamp the four heraldic emblems, the rose, the thistle, the daffodil and the shamrock complete the design. The 7d stamp is yellow-green and the 8d is violet-red.

Southern Rhodesia has announced an issue of commemorative stamps in 1940, eight denominations from ½d to 1 shilling. The designs will be scenes depicting the colony's history.

Germany will not issue any new air mail stamps, so it is announced, and all current stamps will be used until exhausted.

Netherlands will issue a set of five stamps to be sold only from May 1 to July 1 as a charity set. Notable historical personages will be depicted on the stamps, the denominations being: 1½ plus 1½c, 3 plus 2c, 4 plus 2s, 5 plus 3c and 12½ plus 3½c. It is announced that a new series will appear with a new portrait of Queen Wilhelmina.

Col. Charles S. Hamilton will be the speaker at the meeting of the Washington Air Mail Society at its meeting tomorrow evening in Hotel Lafayette.

Frank Godden, of London, who has many friends in Washington, says in a recent interview: "The number of stamp collectors continues to increase at a rapid pace. This is applicable to every type of collector from the connoisseur of early and rare pieces to the junior who spends a few coppers of his pocket money for a highly colored pictorial set."

P. D. Weeks has moved his stamp shop from G street to 806 Seventeenth street, northwest.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney's amendment for an appropriation of $6,500 to provide for the philatelic truck's tour has been added to the Treasury-Postoffice supply bill.

Selfridge & Co., Ltd., of London, has now one of the largest stamp departments in the British Empire. Many Washington collectors have received the new 84-page catalog that is profusely illustrated and contains much valuable information for all philatelists.

The Washington Federation of Junior Stamp Collectors met at the Carlton Hotel on Wednesday evening at 6:45 o'clock, Miss Mollie M. Lewis presiding. The rules of the federation were explained and several members spoke on "My Favorite Stamp."

Viking's Crew, No. 8, has dropped from membership in the American Cancelation Society and has adopted the new name of Viking's Crew Hobby Club. Louis G. Nix is president of the club and its next meeting will be held on March 24 at 35 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

There will be an auction sale on Friday, April 7, at the Washington Stamp Co., 937 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, conducted by mail. This is forty-second sale and consist of 361 lots of United States and 457 foreign lots.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in the Thomson Community Center and was addressed by Col. C. S. Hamilton on "The Stamps of Mexico—Twentieth Century." The speaker exhibited a dozen frames of choice material from his collection, which is one of the finest and most complete Mexican collections in the country.

Among the items displayed were Mexico's rarest stamp, in the estimation of Col. Hamilton, the 1913 issue, the embossed green seal with the Roman numeral "2" (Scott 324A). This is also one of the of the rarest stamps in the world, and only six copies are known, only two being on a cover as displayed. The cancellation of stamps on this cover is of "Oct. 13, 1913."

The Oaxaca issue of 1914 was shown on cover and one unsevered pair. Of the coach seal issue the unique cover with a 5-centavos, 1914, with the seal and one without the seal, both stamps being from the same sheet.

The cover with a block of four of the 4-centavos imperforate, 1923-25 issue, of which but one sheet of a hundred stamps was printed, is both rare and unusual.

Mexico's rarest air-mail stamp also was displayed. This is the 25-centavos, 1928, issue. It is an error in colors, the original stamp being brown, carmine and gray, when the error as shown on cover is brown, carmine and green. Only 32 copies of this stamp wer issued.

The club voted to send ten frames to the exhibition of the Frederick Stamp Club. At the meeting on Tuesday evening an address will be delivered by Representative John M. Coffee, of Washington.

The fourth anunal stamp exhibition of the Washington Federation of Junior Stamp Collectors will be held early in May. There will be two sections and two classes for juniors, aged 8 to 13 years, inclusive, and ages 14 to 18 years, inclusive. Suitable awards will be made in all classes. Entries must be made to the secretary, Frank Hermann, 4107 Fifth street northwest, by April 19.

Sweden to Issue New Current Set Of Postage Stamps

Sweden is to issue a new current set of postage stamps and it is expected that the entire set of 17 values will be all issued before spring. The low denominations, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45 and 50 ore will contain a profile of King Gustav V, this time facing to the right. This portrait is the work of Torsten Schonberg. The designs for the seven higher values, 60, 85, 90, 100, 115, 120 and 145 ore show three crowns from the coat of arms. The design on these stamps is by Arthur K. Johansson. The word "ore" is not on the stamps but the word "Sverige" and the value appear. The new stamps will replace the issue in use since 1920.

Two commemoratives are also due this year. One of these stamps will mark the centenary of the death of Per Henrik Ling, on May 3, 1939. He was the founder of Stockholm's Royal Gymnastic Central Institute and invented Sweden's calisthenics system. The other stamp will be issued on the 200th anniversary of the founding of the Royal Swedish Academy of Science on June 2, 1939.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

In a current weekly a writer asks the following question: "What is ahead for philately?" This question is easily answered. Philately will forge ahead, for stamps will always be bought, sold and collected. The inference that the future of philately depends wholly on market conditions is neither sound or reasonable. Stamp collectors are subjected to market conditions when buying, yet few of them consider the price an all important factor. Few philatelists refuse to collect because the price is "too high or too low." They may purchase large quantities or a limited number by reason of cost, but money values do not necessarily hinder collecting.

W. M. STUART.

A few years ago when prices of certain United States stamps were rather high sales may have decreased, but today when prices are quoted very low we refuse to accept the theory that collectors will stop buying fearing a rising market. The stock of stamp dealers cannot remain dormant. Prices are set to sell goods and stamps must be placed in a class with other commodities.

Obviously the stamp market will react to every economic law. Our correspondent says: "As times improve, so will stamp values, and as stamp values improve so will today's alleged distressing days assume their true light as the wise buyer's golden opportunity." Collect stamps for the pleasure it affords and let's not worry over what is ahead for philately any more than we worry over what is ahead for many other problems in life.

Nation Celebrates Wildlife Week; Interest Aroused by Artist

Government Printing Office Recognizes Word as One Concept

By Howard Zahniser

Wild geese nesting on a North Dakota wildlife preserve

America's wildlife resources—literally shot to pieces until preservation organizations went to work—come to the front today with the beginning of National Wildlife Restoration Week. It finds the American public in general well aware of the problems involved and well inclined to listen to discussions of their solution. The country's wildlife resource—described five years ago by the crusading J. N. Darling as the bowlegged girl that no one would invite to the party—has been admitted as one of the concerns of an increasingly conservation-minded public.

Even the language shows evidence of this development in thinking. The Government Printing Office has ruled that "wildlife" is one word, conforming to the requirement that it express "a unit idea that is not conveyed by the component words in unconnected succession." Although few may choose to rely on the G. P. O.'s phraseology for an explanation, nearly everyone in America today has a fair understanding of what the unit idea of "wildlife" is.

For one thing, it is not synonymous with "game," and in this fact is one explanation for the increasing general interest in wildlife. Currency of a new term that means not only game species but all the creatures of the wild that are of recreational or esthetic interest has been accompanied by the support of garden clubs and nature clubs, as well as sportsmen's organizations and other long-standing groups of conservationists. The broadened meaning has also led to a greater interest among unaffiliated citizens, as it emphasizes in more and more detail the inter-relationship of wildlife conservation and general welfare. Of basic importance, of course, is the fact that these matters of terminology are reflecting an actual change of attitude—as well as making possible its further promotion.

Popular With Officials

This new national attitude is well reflected in developments in the Federal Government. Wildlife is popular today in official circles. Strangely enough, through the accidents of historical development, the two bureaus that are most directly concerned with wildlife do not carry the name. The title of the Bureau of Fisheries is adequately descriptive, but the agency that discharges the Federal Government's responsibilities for the birds, the mammals and all other vertebrate wild creatures except fishes still carries on under the heavy title of the Bureau of Biological Survey.

Yet the name "wildlife" is common in Washington. There is a wildlife division in the Forest Service, another with the same name in the Soil Conservation Service and an identical third in name in the National Park Service. It is now realized that any agency administering large areas of land and water has a responsibility for conserving wildlife. From being a forgotten resource, wildlife has come to be eagerly remembered. The once-neglected bowlegged girl now finds admirers on every hand who are eager to help her across the street.

This high standing of wildlife in American thought today is probably due in large part to the disaster that so closely threatened the migratory waterfowl a half dozen years ago and to the dramatic way in which this disaster was averted. One obvious crisis provoked a general concern. When people who had looked at migrating ducks and geese in spring and fall since days they could barely remember were suddenly confronted with the prospect that the waterfowl, like the passenger pigeons, might some season soon make their last great flight they were readily aroused to action. The American way with the pigeons and the buffalo had been a sorry thing, but it made a similar fate for other species unthinkable.

Decline Was Alarming

It was precisely such a prospect that seemed to face the waterfowl in 1933 and 1934. Students of bird life had for several decades been reporting and forecasting an alarming decline in the numbers of ducks and geese, but at the expense of a reputation as pessimists and alarmists. Then drought seared breeding grounds and resting and feeding places of the birds. The decrease was accelerated until it became apparent even to those who were most reluctant to admit it.

Among the ranks of sportsmen themselves—who had learned to suspect a "nature lover" or "sentimental" source for most arguments for restraint in hunting—there were many who thought that the prohibition of wildfowling was imperative. As a matter of fact, the season probably would have been closed if State funds for game-law enforcement had been available from any other source than the licenses of hunters (who would, of course, not buy shooting permits for a close season), or if Federal funds for enforcement had seemed large enough to make the close season a fact as well as a gesture.

As it happened, with the help of exceedingly stringent hunting restrictions, the birds managed to get through their worst seasons, and public opinion rallied quickly to prevent their further decimation. The careful thinking and earnest discussion that the situation provoked led to a conclusion so definite and so simple that the solution was inescapable. There were clearly two reasons why the ducks had gone down hill. First, of course, there had been too many of them shot. But that was not all. There was the likewise apparent fact that the settlement of the country had deprived many of them of places where they could breed, rest during migration, and find food and safety on wintering grounds. The course of action was clear: Regulate hunting more strictly but also restore to the birds some of the areas that had been taken from them.

Darling Led Crusade

It was the application of this second precept that kindled the imagination of the public and aroused the essential interest in the program. Restoration was a positive goal. Although it seemed a long way ahead, under the leadership of Darling conservationists started toward it with the spirit of crusaders. When it became apparent that other goals toward which the American public was orienting itself could be realized by traveling the same road, the wildlife conservationists found that they had many traveling companions. As Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace expressed it, "the conditions that favor wildlife and promote wilderness areas are identical with those that alleviate the effects of drouth, provide flood control, prevent soil erosion, and provide for the preservation of our fertile soil."

The extent to which the program has been effective is apparent in the fact that there are now 234 Federal wildlife refuges in the United States with a total acreage of more than 7,000,000, and for three years in succession the Biological Survey's annual waterfowl inventory has revealed an appreciable increase in most species.

Established Objective

But the campaign for waterfowl restoration has had a broader significance. The urgent publicizing by its advocates aroused a general interest in wildlife. The proof of its interrelationships with other social objectives—upon which proof its financing depended in large measure—has established wildlife conservation among the objectives of national planning. Finally, the difficulty with which the program was initiated and implemented has led to the permanent organization of the forces that must support wildlife conservation in the future.

When J. N. Darling resigned as chief of the Biological Survey, he proceeded to establish for the benefit of his successors the sort of organization for which he had looked in vain. That was the genesis of the National Wildlife Federation, the organization that is sponsoring National Wildlife Restoration Week. Thus, out of a crisis for the waterfowl there have developed a national movement for the benefit of all wildlife, an official realization of the importance of wildlife in connection with all programs involving the administration of lands, and a national federation of groups who are seeing to it that wildlife will never again become a forgotten resource.

Titania's Palace Gets House Cleaning for Fair

Titania's Palace, the famous English doll house of Sir Neville Wilkinson, is now getting a housecleaning, according to John L. Dowrick, manager of the American Express Travel Service, who reports that it is one of the exhibits to be placed in the Children's World at the New York World's Fair.

More than 4,000 articles in the palace are to be cleaned, and Oberon's chair and couch are to be repaired and fitted with loose covers. New panels are being painted for the chapel and new ceilings are being painted in some of the rooms.

The palace contains, among other things of interest, Oberon's collar stud, so tiny it can hardly be seen; an organ which can be played; a piano so small that its keys can be struck only with match sticks; a tiny baby carriage and little bars of soap and minute sponges for bathing.

Monkey Island

The happiest monkeys in the world are the 500 inhabitants of the island of Santiago, according to visitors who have returned from Puerto Rico. Though now ranging over the tropical paradise like old-timers, the monkey inhabitants were all imported from India this winter.

To reach their new home they had to make a journey of 14,000 miles, said to be the longest on record for so large a shipment of animals. With the exception of 25 gibbons, the monkeys are all of the rhesus type which are held sacred in India, and are noted for their rather cross and irritable dispositions.

Message Floats 170 Miles

When floods swept down a usually dry gully near his home in July, 1938, Robert Genschorczk, 14, of Colorado Springs, Col., tossed in a bottle containing a message. Six months later it was returned from Holly, Colo., 170 miles away.

American Folklore

Because of the fundamental similarity of many of the forces at work and the stage of their development, the New World picture of folk culture has sufficient unity that, in considering it in our own country, we should consider the whole New World picture. This reason alone would justify our consideration of our sister republics in which Hispanic culture is fundamental, even though this culture were entirely absent from our own country, which it is not.

The earliest notable transplantation of folk culture to America was the Hispanic, and it came directly to our country, before the English. It first struck squarely in the heart of the New World, in the Caribbean. So in time and in space it has advantages over other transplantations, for it has had a longer time in which to grow in America, and it was advantageously planted in a geographically central location, from which it could and did grow west, south and north.

It spread up our Atlantic coast, through Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas. It spread all the way around our Gulf coast, from Florida to Texas. It spread across and up from our Southwest, clear to the Pacific, naming States like New Mexico, Colorado, Navada and California.

It has receded only reluctantly within our very borders today. It remains a vigorous growth in most of our nearest neighbors, with whom we are destined to have closest contacts by the dictates of both geography and history.

The transplantation of Hispanic folk culture was first made at a very fortunate time, when that culture was enjoying a most vigorous growth on its own native soil. It was precisely in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries that Spain enjoyed her Golden Age of literature, language, national and religious unity, of empire and world prestige.

Ferdinand and Isabela made Spain one of the first strong modern national entities. Carlos V and Felipe II championed that powerful unifying cultural entity, the Catholic Church. Nebrija and Juan de Valdes gave Spain a fine and unified language. Cervantes and Lope de Vega expressed the national genius so artistically that it was admired and imitated throughout Europe. DeSoto, Cortes, Ponce de Leon and many others gave Spain one of the greatest empires the world had ever seen. This vigorous spirit of national growth and consciousness infused Spain's folklore with extraordinary life.

And through Spain's language and literature, conquistadores and colonizers, Spanish folk culture in this period of intense growth was happily transplanted in the New World, where it took root and spread with renewed vivacity, profoundly modifying the native Indian folk patterns and coloring notably our own contemporary folk culture.

The influx of Hispanic folk culture into our country has been continuous and has been especially lively in recent years. Our war with Spain in 1898 brought territories that gave renewed force to this influx. Thousands of Puerto Ricans have come into the United States in recent years. The cigar industry brought thousands into Florida. Over a million Mexican laborers have poured across our southwestern border. And quite recently the radio has reminded us with startling swiftness of the geographic proximity of Hispanic cultural areas, for Spanish-speaking stations are tuned in as easily as many stations in our own country.

With these considerations, none can doubt the importance the Hispanic cultural heritage deserves in a folk festival which aspires sincerely and without prejudice to reflect the folk life on our Nation in proper perspective and realistically, as the complex pattern of partially fused and somewhat adapted transplanted and indigenous elements it really is.

Fairs Enhance Tours For Foreign Travelers

Cook's Offers Five Itineraries That Include North American Scenic Glories From Lake Louise to Juarez, Broadway to Treasure Island

Drawn by the World's Fair, visitors from Great Britain, France, Italy, Poland, the Balkan states and Egypt, among other foreign countries, will come to New York this summer under Cook's auspices. According to George W. White, in charge of American travel, most of these travelers from abroad are planning to take one of the new and improved "Scenic America Tours," spanning both fairs, or visiting the National Parks of this country and Canada.

"Successful as they were last summer, the tours will be even better this year," says Mr. White. "They will include more scenic interest with a minimum of added time and expense, and they offer five different and highly attractive itineraries, traveling by rail and motor-coach and, in three instances, by steamer as well."

Visit to Icefields

The most striking new feature, says Cook's expert, will be a visit to the Columbia icefield in the course of a 16-day Canadian Rockies-Jasper Park tour. This innovation has been made possible by the opening up of a new motor highway north from Lake Louise, from which are visible 100 of the largest glaciers in the world. This tour, leaving New York each Friday, July 7 to August 4, travels by rail and by Great Lakes steamer to Calgary. Two and half days in and around Banff and the Lake Louise country will include motor trips to Emerald Lake, "Valley of the Ten Peaks" and Moraine Lake, followed by a four-day sojourn at Jasper National Park. The return to New York will be by way of Winnipeg, St. Paul and Chicago.

Another itinerary, according to Mr. White, is the Yellowstone Park-Colorado-Rocky Mountain parks tour. This 14-day trip will leave Mondays, July 3, 17 and 31 and August 14, going by rail via Buffalo, Chicago and Omaha to Denver; thence, by motor coach to Grand Lake Lodge via Lookout Mountain, and to Colorado Springs and the surrounding country, including a choice of sightseeing trips to Pike's Peak and Garden of the Gods or the Buckhorn Pass Scenic Circle Trip. By rail once more to Salt Lake City, with a side-trip to Saltair and and Great Salt Lake, and, finally, to Yellowstone Park for a visit of four days before beginning the return journey by way of St. Paul and Chicago.

Exposition on Itineraries

The other three tours have one feature in common, in that each makes possible a visit to the Golden Gate Exposition, at San Francisco, as well as the New York World's Fair. However, there is wide variety in the routes followed. The shortest is the 21-day California-Canadian Rockies tour, which will leave on two Saturdays, July 1 and August 5, visiting New Mexico and Arizona, including Grand Canyon; thence by rail and motor to Riverside and San Diego and southward to Agua Caliente and Tia Juana, Mexico, before returning for a two-day stop in Los Angeles. Yosemite next, followed by two days in San Francisco, including a sightseeing trip to the exposition; and so by rail to Portland and Tacoma with motor trips in the surrounding country, including Rainier Park en route to Seattle. Here passengers transfer to Canadian Pacific steamship for the sail to Victoria, Vancouver, and thence, by rail and motor, to Emerald Lake, Lake Louise, Banff and the surrounding country, including Moraine Lake and the Valley of Ten Peaks, returning to New York via St. Paul and Chicago.

More leisurely is the Yellowstone-Pacific Coast-S. S. Dixie tour, a 26-day trip which will leave on two Saturdays, July 1 and 29. Special features of this trip are four days at Yellowstone Park and a three-day stay at San Francisco; Yosemite, trips northward to Washington and Oregon and southward to Los Angeles, El Paso, Tex., and Juarez, Mexico, en route to New Orleans. Sightseeing in this infinitely picturesque and historic city will be followed by transfer to the S. S. Dixie for a return sea-breeze cruise of four days.

With 30 days to spare, one may take the National Parks-Pacific Coast tour, which will leave on two Sundays, July 2 and July 30. This trip will combine a great many features of the other tours into one extended itinerary, with the added attractions, en route to San Francisco and the exposition, of visits to Bryce Canyon and Zion National Park, on the north rim of Grand Canyon and to Boulder Dam, with a yacht trip on Lake Mead. On the return journey, it will visit Glacier National Park, Many Glacier and Lake McDonald instead of the Banff-Lake Louise route.

"All roads lead back to New York and the World's Fair," says Cook's expert. "And whichever trip one takes, he will truly feel that he has seen 'Scenic America'!"

British Railway To Have Exhibit At World's Fair

Display Takes Form Of Travel Information Bureau; Map to Feature

The British Railways, in co-operation with the Travel and Industrial Association of Great Britain and Ireland, are providing an exhibit at the World's Fair, New York, which takes the form of a railway and travel information bureau.

The bureau will be located at the foot of the giant statue of Britannia, the golden figure which will be a prominent feature of the Attractions of Britain section of the British Government Pavilion, C. M. Turner, of the Associated British & Irish Railways stated.

The entrance to the bureau will be flanked on either side by models of four famous British express trains, the Coronation Scot of the London Midland & Scottish Railway (the actual train will be on exhibition at the fair), the Coronation of the London & North Eastern Railway, the Cornish Riviera Express of the Great Western Railway and the Brighton Belle (electric) of the Southern Railway.

Most prominent feature of the interior display will be an illuminated map, measuring ten feet by six feet. Across the top appears the Shakesperian quotation "This Royal House of Kings, this sceptered isle . . ." and represents the motif of the display. The quotation is concluded at the foot: "This precious stone set in a silver sea." Besides giving the main railway routes in Great Britain and Ireland, the highlights of scenic and historic interest are represented on the map by miniature drawings. At each corner of the map are emblazoned the arms of England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, respectively. This illuminated map gives at a glance a complete picture of "tourist" Britain and Ireland. Visitors will be able to plot their journeys visually and the map will be an extremely efficient aid to the purpose of the bureau—that of demonstrating Britain's attractions for the American tourist.

Persimmon Tree May Follow Chestnut

Atlanta, Ga. (AP).—Is the persimmon tree to go the way of the blight-ravaged chestnut? The "explosive" spread of a destructive, newly-discovered wilt disease has led tree experts to fear that it may.

The persimmon wilt, showing all evidence of having been brought in from a foreign country, was detected and identified two years ago in a narrow valley southeast of Nashville, Tenn. Since then it has appeared in parts of Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina. It is a fungus disease and may spread through wind-blown spores.

Destruction of the persimmon tree would remove a valuable source of wood for golf club heads, shuttle blocks used in weaving and other wood materials requiring unusual hardness.

Canada Exporting Fish

Canada is now sending fish to all parts of North America. The fisheries of the prairie provinces have a yearly output of more than $4,000,000.

Busy Month for Port of New York

Next month 65 shiploads of passengers will sail from Atlantic seabord ports for Europe. This picture of New York's giant piers shows several of the well-known transatlantic liners, as well as two engaged in the South American run. From the bottom to the top are the Hamburg, of the Hamburg-American Line; the Bremen and the Columbus, of the North-German Lloyd; the de Grasse and the Normandie, of the French Line; the Brittanic and Acquitania, of the Cunard White Star Line; the Conte de Savoia, of the Italian Line; a small unidentified vessel, the Fort Townsend, of the Trinidad Line, and the Monarch of Bermuda, of the Furness Line

Discover New Lakes In New Guinea

Sydney, Australia (AP).—Two lakes have been discovered from the air in New Britain—one of the large islands of the Bismarck Archipelago of New Guinea—by Capt. R. O. Mant, flight superintendent of the Australia-New Guinea air mail service.

He said one of the lakes was about 2 miles long and 1½ miles wide, fed by a river at one end. The other was in the middle of a swamp.

Cuban Tomatoes

Practically all the tomatoes you buy in the stores during the winter come from Cuba, and they arrive at the rate of two boatloads a week. Loads of as many as 42,584 cases are frequent. The tomatoes are delicate as orchids and are handled with great care. They arrive quite green, but soon turn red on the fruit stands.

Miami Lures Vacationists From Abroad

Miami, Fla.

Taking front rank as an international resort, Miami, the Riviera of the Americas, is becoming a mecca this season for European vacationists.

The international smart set, finding the rattling of sabers too close to the famous spas along the Mediterranean and other continental haunts, is making the eastern coast of south Florida its pleasure objective.

Foreign travel to Miami, showing a 25 per cent increase this season, is at its highest level in history.

More than a dozen cruise ships, operating from France, Britain, Germany and Canada, have brought 5,000 vacationists to the palm-lined shores of Biscayne Bay since the first of the year and advance bookings show Southern cruises are continuing in popularity.

Added to the unprecedented flow from abroad are visitors arriving at the rate of more than 200 a day aboard the giant clipper ships that swing into Miami's international airport from the West Indies and 21 nations in Central and South America.

International interest is attached to the current feature of Miami's water sports program, the twenty-sixth annual Biscayne Bay Regatta, to be held today. A highlight is a trial for a new world's record between the title-holding Gray Goose II, owned by George C. Cannon, of New York, and S. Mortimer Auerbach's Emancipator VII, which captured the Duke of York's cup in Europe last year.

Society's interest is also focused on Tropical Park, where the thoroughbreds are running in Miami's third racing meet of the season. The kennel clubs and the jai-alai (hi-li) fronton are still popular gathering places for nocturnal pleasure-seeking crowds.

Blending of Old, New Charms Tourists at Cairo

Ancient Egypt Takes Modern World in Stride

Cairo, Egypt.

Cairo is modern—a stroll on its fashionable boulevards, a trip on its streamlined trains, will tell you that. Yet even in these up-to-the-minute surroundings a glance at its inhabitants tells you that Cairo takes the modern world in its stride, accepts the best of it as a matter of course, and looks on into the future with eyes that have seen the rise of many a brilliant civilization and can be surprised at nothing.

For this blending of the old and the new, the sophisticated and the primitive, is certainly what gives Cairo its indescribable quality, what lures people of all nations and all ages, whatever their birth or education, whatever their age or sex. In the Sharia Kamel, for example, one sees a stalwart, handsome savage from the Stone-age civilization of the Sudan, and within the same bend of the street, a couple of Arabs from Bagdad, a Greek merchant from Piraeus, an English dowager in her Rolls-Royce, Persian rug merchants, Hindu perfumers, a French engineer, traders from Indo-China, Afghanistan, the Gold Coast of Africa.

There is scarcely a race of people in the world but has its representatives in Cairo, for here of all the cities in the world they can find not only the means of making a living but a certain cultural background, however obscure it may be to the casual observer, that enables them to feel "at-home." Situated for more than a thousand years at the crossroads of the world, at the link between East and West, and North and South, Cairo has during that time absorbed something of all the peoples who have lived in its houses and walked its streets. Indeed, this cosmopolitan character of Cairo is nowhere better reflected than in Al Azhar University, the oldest university in the world and the chief divinity school of Islam, which almost since its founding in 970 A. D. has received students from all corners of the Eastern world, including the far-flung islands of Oceania and Australia.

Racing at Gezira Island

And in the midst of this potpourri of the ages, catching the eye and in key with the twentieth century, are immaculate modern apartments with pent-houses and silent elevators; hotels whose festivities and patronage embrace the most distinguished personages in Europe and America. On Gezira Island, in the center of the Nile, which flows through Cairo, there is a sports club where the creations of Europe's smartest dress designers are often first exhibited, and Europe's fastest horses seen in competition with prize Arab stock from the stables of such turfmen as Prince Mohammed Ali and King Farouk.

Nothing is too advanced or daring for Cairo. Nothing is too old or strange to be appreciated for its beauty, its power to amuse, its human interest. In the drives of private homes, at Heliopolis stand the latest models of American motor cars, and often the most expensive; in the cool, green gardens that lie behind their thick walls one may see an alabaster vase upward of 5,000 years old; a magnolia tree imported from China. Passing the hotel terrace at night, one hears the latest American dance tunes—special new selections from Prague, Paris or London. A midnight visit to the pyramids may disclose an aeroplane bound against the bright stars for the Sudan.

Any time is a good time to visit Cairo. The changes in climate during the year are not varied enough to be a determining factor. Each season brings with it something of outstanding interest that cannot be witnessed or experienced at any other season.

Mammoth Festival in August

During the winter months, and until the end of March, for example, horseracing provides a pageant of color and excitment on the tracks at Gezira Island and Heliopolis. But in August, one of Cairo's most spectacular and ancient festivities, the "Cutting of the Khalig," a ceremony commemorating the time when the dam across the Nile at Cairo was cut to inundate the rich agricultural lands to the north, occurs. Hundreds of thousands of Cairo's people take part in this gala water festivity. It lasts for several days. The river is a colorful blaze of lights by night and a milling panorama of gaily decked out steamboats and native craft by day.

And during the spring months, from the end of March until about the end of May, the city undergoes one of those magical and moving transformations that come over all cities in the spring. From the deserts to the east, west and south, from the distant oases and mountains, come the Beduins and other tribesmen with flocks of young lambs, their baskets of cheeses and crocks of wild honey. There is new life in the city, for people are going and people are arriving, not only by boat and plane and train, but by camel, by horseback and afoot. The gardens are bright with flowers. The desert between Alexandria and Cairo is spotted with wild anemones and daisies. Toward evening the highways are thronged with motor cars, their occupants bound for picnic parties in the sand dunes under the stars.

Trips to the Oases

Unquestionably, spring is the most delightful time of year to visit Egypt's monuments and to see the land from which they emerged at its best. Indeed, visitors who have become fond of the desert, return annually to Cairo in March to see the desert in bloom and make tours up the Nile valley, with side trips to such beautiful and easily accessible oases as Fayoum. Others, with more time to spend, take journeys to the more distant oases of Kharga, Bahariya and even Siwa, renowned since the time of Herodotus as the Oasis of Jupiter Ammon and visited by Alexander the Great.

All of Egypt's famous monuments are now easily accessible by modern trains, luxurious river boats, or motor cars. The hotels at these points of interest, or from which they can be reached, leave nothing to be desired from the point of view of comfort, attention and cuisine. Their rooms are large and airy. Service is unobtrusive. Telephone and cable connections are available with practically every part of the civilized world.

The Citadel, or El-Kala, was built by Saladin about 1166. The Mosque, a magnificent alabaster structure, was completed in 1857. Its dome and twin slender minarets are among the city's most picturesque features. The capital contains over 250 mosques with nearly as many chapels

Laura Waters Elected A. S. T. A. Officer for '39

Laura Waters, of Waters Ideal Tours, has been selected to serve on the executive board of the American Steamship and Tourist Agents' Association for 1939, becoming the first woman to be elected as an officer of this travel group. Mrs. Waters also is the first and only woman to own and operate a travel bureau in Washington.

From June 15 to September 1, 1938, Mrs. Waters traveled 19,764 miles from Washington to Washington, crossing the Atlantic twice, traveling up and down Europe, crossing the United States, up to Alaska and returning through Canada. During the World's Fair in Chicago, in 1935, she conducted 4,000 tourists to Chicago. She was the organizer and a president of the National Parks Club of America, and has written and lectured on America's National Parks. She instituted the monthly sightseeing trips for conducted groups to historical Virginia, visiting the homes of Presidents and other points dear to the hearts of Americans.

Planes Detour Over Treasure Island

United Air Lines announced tonight that effective immediately all coast-to-coast trips will be flown both night and day directly over Treasure Island and the San Francisco Exposition, the lights of which are visible for 60 to 80 miles as the plane approaches from the east. Detouring of planes over the fair also gives travelers a view of the famous Golden Gate and Trans-Bay Bridges.

Work Resumed On 'Stockholm'

C. Hilmer Lundbeck, United States managing director of the Swedish American Line, announces that he has received a radiogram from Axel Jonsson, president of the line, that work has been resumed on the line's 28,000-ton motorliner Stockholm, damaged by fire at the Cantieri Riuniti shipyards at Montfalcone, Italy, while nearing completion. Progress is being made at a satisfactory rate and it is expected that the new ship will be completed and delivered to the line the latter part of 1940.

The Stockholm, which is being built to the highest class in Lloyd's Register and the British Corporation Register, will be 625 feet in length, with Diesel motors developing 22,000 horse power to drive the ship at an average speed of 19 knots. She will accommodate 1,300 passengers on transatlantic runs and 620 on cruises. The latest devices will be installed to provide the utmost in safety, comfort and enjoyment for ocean travelers. When completed, she will have fire protection systems of the newest type to meet not only the Swedish and international regulations, but also to conform to the new United States laws.

France's Oracle

France has its own peculiar oracle in the hell holes of Voiron. These holes are regarded by local residents as a barometer of the country's fortune. Large pits filled with water, the hell holes acquired their name from a tradition that says they extend to the very depths of inferno. Their depth is actually unknown even today. The water which fills them is milky in color and is evidently supplied by some subterranean spring or river. At times they spout as high as 6 feet, a watery eruption which is said to presage some disaster to the nation.

Airport Announces Hongkong Flight

"All aboard for San Francisco, Honolulu, Manila and Hongkong."

This announcement is made each Tuesday night over the loudspeaker at United Air Lines airports to announce the joint air mail-passenger-express plane service of United Air Lines' Mainliners and Pan American clippers connecting at San Francisco.

Under the new schedules only one business day is lost traveling from Atlantic seabord, Great Lakes and Middle West cities to Honolulu. Both the Mainliner landplanes of United and the clipper planes of Pan American are sleeper planes and while passengers sleep in beds as large as twin beds in their own homes, they traverse in two nights a distance which requires nine days of rail-steamer travel.

Norway's newest and largest ship, M. S. Oslofjord, sails July 6 for a 44-day cruise of North Cape, Scandinavia. This "Sun Trail" cruise is sponsored by Frank Travel Service, who have satisfied thousands of passengers on Scandinavian cruises.

In all, the ship and passengers will cruise over 3,000 miles, visiting Iceland first, then to the North Country for nature's most dramatic pageant, the Midnight Sun. Cruising leisurely along Norway's coast line, the passengers are given plenty of time to absorb the beauty of fjords and to explore quaint Scandinavian villages—an opportunity to contrast primitive Lapland and medieval Reykjavik with the modern sophistication of Oslo, Stockholm and Copenhagen. Stops in Holland, France and Scotland, too, are planned in this all-inclusive itinerary, with a six-day excursion to Paris as a high spot.

The Oslofjord was planned for just such cruises. The main dining room has been placed on the promenade deck, in light and airy surroundings. An oak-paneled smoke room overlooks the sea on three sides. A closed veranda, another vantage point from which to view the passing scene, runs around the large social hall. For those who linger too long at the smorgasbord table a completely equipped gymnasium, Finnish baths and tiled swimming pool are provided.

Bermuda Offers Family Haven From Worries

Automobiles Are Not There to Knock the Children Off Bikes

Bermuda, island of sanity, safety and freedom from crime, is becoming a favorite spot for a family vacation. Peaceful and quiet, it has a charm that is singular.

Dad gets a rest—fishing, golfing or yachting, as his mood demands—and mother is free from worry about the safety of her children, big or small, because they may romp as if guarded by a hundred detectives.

Little children love to ride bicycles, and Bermuda offers haven for those of the two or three wheeled stage. They can take them along or rent the bikes upon their arrival, by the hour, day or week. But being run down by a fast-moving automobile is out of order, because there just aren't any gasoline buggies on the island. Families are seen frequently pedaling along with their lunch boxes packed in the basket, to be nibbled on some coral beach. All hotels are prepared to pack a meal on short notice for impromptu trips afield.

The bathing, in pools at any time, or in the surf during the spring and summer months, is safe because coral reefs protect the swimmers from dangerous cross-currents.

And it is early to bed and early to rise in Bermuda. The large hotels have dancing to entertain their guests but, generally speaking, the curfew is about midnight. The younger-set members are ready for bed even sooner, so they can be up and about with the first sign of the sun.

The tennis courts and the golf links are within easy reach of all. A horse and carriage will take the lazy folks about the island, but one will find most everyone on a bicycle, sometimes built for two. Even in full dress and long dancing skirts, they manage to travel in this fashion and love it.

Mother, if she doesn't care for sports, will enjoy the gardens, especially the lily fields at Easter time. And the century-old, interesting buildings will bring forth the sightseeing desire. The shops can fill every need, and few women can get on the home-bound boat or plane without a new English tweed suit or at least a bag or sweater. Special attention is given to everyone who has just a few days in Bermuda.

Half Fares for Children to Fairs

Here is good news for youngsters who want to fly to the New York or San Francisco World's Fairs. Parents who have hesitated in previous years to travel by air on summer vacations due to full rates charged for children, can now take advantage of the new airline rulings which permit children up to 2 years of age to be carried free, and between 2 and 12 to travel at half fare. The airlines, by this reduced rate for children, have made their tariffs correspond with those of railroads, reports United Air Lines.

Washing Machine Costs Cut

Ten years ago washing machine manufacturers needed six operations to make a tub from the best steel available. Better steel today makes a tub in only two operations and costs one-third less.

Europe Offers Low Rail Rates

Tourists Who Plan Ahead Can Get Reductions of 25 to 70 Per Cent

"How to Save Money on Travel" should be the first chapter in every book on Europe today, is the belief of S. N. Bliss, manager of the Foreign Independent Travel Department of the American Express Travel Service.

"Practically every country in Europe today offers some special reduction in rail fares, which will result in travel savings of from 25 per cent to 70 per cent," states Bliss, who has just completed a survey of the various savings available and the conditions under which they can be obtained.

"England, France, Germany, Ireland, Scotland, Italy, Poland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Latvia, Greece, Estonia, Belgium and Switzerland are all offering special rail reductions this summer, according to advices just received from our European offices," Bliss continues.

Make Plans Early

In order to secure these reductions, however, it is important that one make one's travel arrangements before going to Europe, for in many cases savings are available only when one buys transportation outside the country.

France, for instance, requires travelers to buy a tourist card for about $1.10 before they enter the country. The card entitles them to a 40 per cent reduction on all regular fares in all rail classes, provided they visit the country six full days and travel 185 miles or more. Latest to offer reductions to travelers with a special tourist card is Belgium, which provides a 35 per cent saving.

In Italy, if certain conditions are met, reductions up to 70 per cent—with the average 50 per cent—can be obtained, and in Germany reductions of 60 per cent are available. In Germany no minimum stay is required, but tickets must be purchased before entering the country. Hungary and Italy, in addition, have special savings for honeymoon couples, and Italy even goes so far as to offer special fares to those on silver and golden wedding trips. Special travelers' checks, which effect a saving on the regular exchange rates, can also be obtained for these countries.

Hungary Has Special Fares

Both Hungary and Estonia offer special fares for visitors to such major events as world congresses, international fairs and national celebrations, while Greece now has in effect a 35 per cent reduction for all who stay not less than 10 days. Hungary has a reduction for those taking cures at its spas. Those visiting Poland can make substantial savings by buying that country's transit tickets, and those in the Scandinavian countries may save up to 30 per cent if they follow certain routes and return to their initial starting point.

Yugoslavia offers a 50 per cent reduction on the homeward journey to those who visit there. In Latvia a 25 per cent rail reduction is obtainable for those who remain seven days, and in Switzerland a 30 per cent saving can be obtained for a week's stay, provided a minimum distance is covered.

In England, Scotland and Ireland travelers may now obtain circle tours at 25 per cent off the sectional fare, and special rates are also available on semi-circular tours.

Atlantic Travel Heavy

A total of 65 shiploads of Europe-bound passengers will sail from the ports of the Atlantic seaboard next month, according to the Institute of Foreign Travel which reports that the outstanding events of interest to travelers include the Oxford and Cambridge boat race and the opening of the Shakespeare Festival in England; the Holy Week and Easter Festivals in Rome under the benediction of the new pope; the Royal Scottish Academy Art Exhibition at Edinburgh; the International Tennis Tournament at Nice on the French Riviera, and the European Boxing Championships at Dublin, Ireland.

Queen Mary's Cruise Allows Week on Isle

Holdover in England Will Permit Visits To Many Points

The schedule of the Queen Mary, sailing from New York April 21, allows for a week's holdover in Southampton, and during this time excursionists could visit many points of interest in the British Isles or on the continent, notably France, Belgium and Holland.

The Queen Mary on this sailing will arrive in Cherbourg and Southampton on April 26, in the very middle of springtime abroad. She will sail from these ports on May 3, arriving in New York on May 8. Thus there is a full week for sightseeing, while excursionists will be but two business weeks away from home.

All three classes of accommodation will be open to excursionists, booking arrangements being similar to those on a regular sailing of the ship.

The voyage will occupy nine days and ten nights at sea, with all ship activities under the leadership of Harold F. Hennesey, who served as excursion director for the recent October 19 fortnight round trip on the same ship.

Mr. Hennesey is one of the originators of the present-day cruise entertainments so popular on tours to the West Indies.

Upon the Queen Mary's return from Europe the New York World's Fair will be in full operation, opening on May 1. Thus people coming from points distant from the metropolis may wind up their excursion to Europe with a visit to the fair, avoiding the crowds that summer will bring, with congested transportation and overtaxed hotel facilities.

Gleneagles Charms Many U. S. Visitors

American visitors to Scotland are discovering in increasing numbers the charm of Gleneagles, a wild heath of purple heather at the foot of the highlands, midway between Perth and Edinburgh.

The physical background of Gleneagles is as Scottish as scones— braw hills and lochs and burns, with the requisite tincture of French in its chateau-like hotel to recall the memory of Bonnie Prince Charlie.

Golfers love Gleneagles for its three famous courses: the "King's" and the "Queen's," where champions have made history, and the "Wee Course," where many a visitor from overseas, beginner or old hand, has "potted the pill" amid scenery that remains forever stamped upon his memory.

Over the horizon are the famous snow-capped mountains: Ben Lomond, Ben Venue, Ben Lawers and Ben Ledi. And among the rocks and glens are bridle paths for an early morning canter; streams of speckled trout where Barrie flicked flies; tennis courts where Perry and Tilden have played. There are bowling greens and an indoor swimming pool.

The cultural background is embodied in places whose very names tell stories. Just a short rail trip away are Ayr and Dumfries, of which Robert Burns sang; Sir Walter Scott's beloved Abbotsford; Sir James Barrie's Kirriemuir.

The historic background fades far into the purple of distant mountains and the dusk of far-away days. For example, there is Scone, not far away, where Scotland's kings used to be crowned.

Scotland, Ireland Draw Visitors

Special Tours Offer Easy, Inexpensive Countryside Visit

New York.—The axiom that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points is not only good mathematics, but also good travel tactics.

In this era of streamlined travel, the vogue grows stronger each year for starting a European trip with Ireland and Scotland, then working down through England and so to Paris and on the continent, or crossing direct from England to Scandinavian lands.

"The British Isles not only offer in themselves a wealth of scenery and historical associations, but also afford an easy introduction to the more foreign atmosphere of other European lands," states W. F. McGrath, general manager of the Anchor Line, which has long been associated with Scottish and Irish ports.

Many passengers, McGrath finds, debark today in Ireland to make a tour of that island before continuing on to Scotland and England. The special 25 per cent reduction now in effect on circle rail tours there offers yet another inducement, he believes, to travelers.

They also make the special motor coach tours, run on frequent schedules from the large cities. From Londonderry or Belfast, for example, visitors may journey via Dublin to the famous Lakes of Killarney, along the Grand Atlantic route through the region of Parknasilla, often called Ireland's Garden of Eden, and back through southern cities to Dublin. Glangarriff, Cork, Wexford and Blarney Castle, that most famous landmark of all, can be included in the route, which also features the majestic scenery of Glendalough. For a short one-day trip, few routes can equal the famous coast drive from Belfast to Portrush, via the Giant's Causeway.

Scotland, like Ireland, has the advantage of being a small country, with some of its finest scenery only a matter of two or three hours from Glasgow, home port of the Anchor Line. Even those pressed for time can spare the few hours necessary to travel across Loch Lomond, through the mountain scenery of the Tressachs and south to historic Edinburgh. And they may come away secure in the knowledge that they have at least sampled Scotland. For travelers with more leisure Scotland affords the wild grandeur of the Highlands, the Burns country, the Scott country, and a wealth of lochs, glens and mountains.

Monaco Has Many Hotels

Monte Carlo, Monaco.—The Principality of Monaco, of which Monte Carlo is part, has established a record for the number of resort hotels within its small span of land (395 acres). Latest reports show that there are 75 hotels.

Meteor Stops In Automobile Springs

Chicago (AP).—Edward McCain, of Benld, Ill., is proud of holes in the roof of his garage, auto top and seat because they were made by the second meteorite recorded as falling in Illinois.

Henry W. Nichols, Field Museum curator of geology, said the four-point meteorite is among 11 such stones known to have struck buildings anywhere in the world and the first to hit an automobile. Approximately 1,300 meteorites are recorded as striking the earth.

The meteorite arrived with a roar described by residents as like that of an airplane going into a power dive, last September. With a sharp crack it plunged through the McCain garage roof, through the top of the auto, seat cushion and floor board, struck the muffler and bounced back to rest entangled in the seat's wire springs.

Flowers "Put to Bed"

Hundreds of flowers on Rome's principal streets are "put to bed" every night by a corps of workers who cover them with large tarpaulins. Special frames keep the canvas from injuring the flowers, which are changed all over the city every 15 days, the type of flower depending on the season of the year. The city maintains a special nursery for cultivation of these flowers.

The Passion Flower

The passion flower, which is so common in Mexico, received its name from the story of the crucifixion of Christ, according to Wm. C. Campbell, passenger traffic manager of the New York and Cuba Mail Line.

The leaves indicate the spear that pierced Christ's side; the tendrils are the cords that bound Him; the ten petals represent the apostles; the pillar in the center is the cross or tree; the style, the nails; the inner circle around the pillar represents the crown of thorns; the radiance, the glory; the white of the flower is the emblem of purity; the blue, the color of heaven and the scent is that of incense.

THE BRITISH TRADITION DISTINGUISHES

CUNARD WHITE STAR

PARADE of YOUTH

Boy Earns Chance to Fly by Hauling Milk

¶ In time of peace, Great Britain is preparing for war by lending fishermen money to build boats. Why fishermen? Because it was the hardy captains and crews of fishing smacks armed with small guns that broke the back of the German submarine campaign in the North Sea during the World War. And one of the trawler skippers perfected a system to find submerged subs by the sound of the U-boat's engines.

• • • •

¶ A "flying grocer's boy" has been found in upper New York State. A wholesale grocery firm uses carrier pigeons to fly orders from customers. A somewhat similar service was in operation in Australia until a few years ago. Two sawmills, not connected by telephone or mail service, kept in constant touch with each other through the pigeons.

• • • •

¶ Add cures for rheumatism: Paper pulp. Workers in German paper mills have found that the pains and aches in their arms stop when those members are kept in the pulp. Now health resorts are featuring the new treatment. Formerly, best remedies for rheumatism were rest and diet. Arthritis, a form of this disease, is the oldest recorded ill. Even giant prehistoric reptiles suffered from it!

• • • •

¶ Hoping to find more radium, scientists have made a seven-mile rope to bring up samples of the ocean's bed. They believe there is more of the mineral under water than there is on land. At that, there wouldn't have to be much. In the 29 years since Mme. Curie first extracted pure radium, less than half a pound has been refined!

• • • •

¶ Wolf-hunters are taking to the air in Finland. It's thought that more of the destroyers of deer can thus be killed. The same idea has already worked on our own great plains, against both wolves and coyotes. And a bold pilot in Texas has even hunted eagles from the air, roaring through narrow canyons at 150 miles an hour!

• • • •

¶ Old-timers in Barrow, Alaska, are wondering where the eider duck goes when it migrates north. They can't figure out where the bird will find land. A tract of unexplored ice lies between Barrow and the North Pole, and Peary, who reached the Pole on foot, never told of seeing any land. Aerial explorers, too, have never reported any land visible in the vast sea of forbidding ice.

Natural History Lesson
The Caribou

The caribou's a sort of deer.
The caribou has horns (we think).
Some caribous are gray (we guess),
But very few of them are pink.
About the critter we are vague,
But this, we think, is true-hue:
The caribou who cries a lot
Is called the caribou-hoo.

Scout Saves Bather; Girl Foils Crook

Alex Yankaskas has ridden a milk wagon into the sky. He had wanted to fly for years. Then he saw his chance. It meant getting up at 3 a. m. every morning to deliver milk, but the money earned bought flying lessons. That's why, at 16, he's Connecticut's youngest licensed pilot!

He hasn't stopped working. Sundays he sells newspapers. He does commercial photography. This money goes into renting a plane to build up flying time for a more advanced license.

In two years Alex hopes to be able to take up passengers. That'll enable him to study some more at a large aeronautical school. His work and study, he hopes, will get him into the Army or Navy as a flier, or a job designing planes.

Designing planes—model ones—was his first aeronautical interest. Then, four years ago, he took his first hop. "After that," he tells Parade at 70 Austin street, New Britain, "nothing could keep me away from the airport."

They Signed on Her

She was put in a cast because her back was broken, but Emilou Whitehead, 18, still had fun. She had her friends autograph the cast!

For 13 weeks after an auto accident she lay in bed with only her arms, head and legs visible. But "the white plaster took to ink like cheese to apple pie," Emilou writes, "and such mottoes as: 'A tisket, a tasket, my head is in a basket,' soon covered the cast."

One friend sent her signature on a piece of adhesive tape. So did radio songbird Kate Smith. Now Emilou is at her home on Route 3, Wabash, Ind.—minus the cast and its autographs. It weighed 50 pounds and "I would have brought it home and hung it with my brother's stuffed ducks," she says, "but my pocket wasn't big enough."

Only Once Before

"No one knows how deep it is," says Pelham Clifton Piek, 16, of a whirlpool in a South African river. And toward that pool one day not long ago the river was pulling Cora Kirsten, who couldn't swim!

Her brother dove for her. She pulled him under. To the aid of both went Pelham. He tore Cora free, fought his way upstream to safety. "With one hand I held her away from me," he writes, "because she was struggling fiercely."

Pelham got a reward, to him the highest in the land—a medal that had been given only once before! It was presented by the Voortrekkers, an organization like the Boy Scouts. As it was pinned on him, he says at 19 Fifth avenue, Geduld Township, Springs, Transvaal:

"I felt very small."

$714 on the Hoof!

For one steer, $714! That's what Willard Frye, 17, pocketed after the recent National Western Livestock Show in Denver, Colo. It came from the sale of "Flash," his steer, that, in its first showing, had won the grand championship!

"Last June I bought him from a neighbor," Willard writes Parade from Route 2, Peoria, Ill. "He weighed around 500 pounds."

Between then and show time the boy added more than 500 pounds to the steer's frame and sold him for 68 cents a pound. At the show Willard got only three hours sleep a night. He was too busy caring for "Flash." But it was worth it.

"When he was made grand champion," he says, "it was the happiest moment of my life."

Out-Talks a Gun

"My first impulse," says Helen Holland, "was to scream. But the sight of the gun stopped me." Instead she started talking. And she talked until a would-be hold-up man put away his gun and walked out empty-handed!

Helen, 18, left high school cravening adventure. But she had to work as cashier in a bakery for a year and a half before she got it. Then it came in the form of a man and a gun, the man saying, "Give me everything you've got in the cash register," and the gun adding emphasis.

Helen told him she couldn't do that—she'd lose her job He said he needed money. She said he could have what was in her pocketbook. That's when he gave up and left.

Then Helen did scream—for the police, who picked up the bandit scarcely a block away. Helen lives at 812 Oswego street, Utica, N. Y.

Emcee

Master of ceremonies on a nationwide radio program and only 14! That's Arthur Ross, who, twice weekly, puts on the "March of Games."

He first took the air more than three years ago as an actor. "I got the job as M. C. through an audition," he writes from [illegible] avenue, New York, N. Y. "That may not seem very glamorous, but it's the truth."

He's saving his money for college, that is what's left after he satisfies his hobby of photography. "If I had a million dollars," he says, "I would spend $10,000 of it on photography."

Stepping Up

He's won five tennis titles in less than two years, but Richard Bender, at 16, is after more. "I sincerely hope some day to be rated among the first ten players," he writes Parade from 342 West Jersey street, Elizabeth, N. J.

If past performances mean anything, he will be. Little more than a year back he swept the National Boys' Indoor Singles, was on the winning doubles team. Next was the Eastern Singles title. Meantime he'd been winning the men's championships in his county.

Now he's stepped up to the junior class and is heading for new honors, although in the recent national tournament all he got was respect. He wasn't rated as one of the best players, but he licked several who were!

Self-Service Bureau

You will notice, in the news review on this page, that complete addresses are given for every boy and girl mentioned. But if you write to any of them for further information, please have a heart and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. It should speed back your reply.

Boy of the Week

Who—Archie Tom Smiley, 19.

Why—Archie has no hands. He lost them nine years ago. But today he plays baseball, football, basketball, drives a car, writes with pen or pencil—and he doesn't use artificial hands!

Where—Chaffee, Mo.

It was a Fourth of July celebration. Ten-year-old Archie Tom Smiley was loading firecrackers into a cannon. Something went wrong. The cannon exploded. When Archie was able to walk again, his arms ended abruptly 10 inches below his elbows. He could not see out of his right eye.

Archie Smiley.

It was four years before he made a discovery—that in sports he could be equal to boys who hadn't tangled with a toy cannon. It would take determination and practice. Archie already had the first. He started after the second.

He went out for everything in high school. He was in the backfield on the football team; at first base or in the outfield on the baseball team.

He ran the 100 and 220 and broad-jumped on the track team. He was on the basketball squad. He swam, rode bicycles, skated.

The result?

"Archie does better than average in anything," says Coach James Smith.

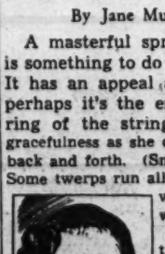
"He was the best blocker on the football team and the best I've had in my coaching experience. He can receive passes, tackle, punt and has the speed of a sprinter."

Hi-Yo Spring!

(Here's the low-down on school and pupils as seen by a high school student—Jane Murdock, 18).

By Jane Murdock.

A masterful spring specialty is something to do with a yo yo. It has an appeal all its own—perhaps it's the enticing whirring of the string, or a girl's gracefulness as she deftly swings it back and forth. (Snicker, snicker). Some twerps run all over the place while playing with a yo yo.



Jane Murdock.

Others do their twisting and flinging while idly dreaming of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. The rah-rah puts in a little effort, puts out a far-from-finished performance. Older people will tire of it quicker than older people, but it should last a week in high school.

When the yo yo goes out it's 'most time for spring fever. But the weather is not as reliable a cause for that as it will be later on, so people go out for spring baseball. It's rare when a bunch of skoits organize a team.

Every twice in a while comes a girl who can actually swing the timber and slug! She turns out to be the unbearable brat you called names on account she hung around the boys. What a change—now just a smooth babe who can smack a ball and wow the men. What men?

Squibbie

She rambled, she rambled—and then—well, read Lena Mae Northam's prize-winning Squibbie, and her note in today's Letters Column.

Jeannie had a nice new bike,
She rode it every day.
Now Jeanie has a plaster-cast,
The bike is put away.

To win your Mystery Prize just send any four-line jingle, with your age, to "Squibbies, Parade of Youth," care of this newspaper.

LETTERS

Anyway, the Bike's All Right

Parade: Yours truly is at this moment suffering from a broken arm. I've worn a "cast" for three weeks. Yes, you've guessed it—a new bicycle with tight brakes was the cause of it all. The bike which threw me wasn't my own, but a friend's. The bike "escaped" uninjured. I am 20.

LENA MAE NORTHAM.
Route 1, Box 78,
Bennettsville, S. C.

Another Use

Parade: I have found another use for Parade besides reading it. I now cut out some of the material, such as "Let's Go Traveling" and Jane Murdock's column. I am going to paste them on the bulletin board in my home room in the high school I attend. I hope the other pupils will enjoy them as much as I do.

BILLY McGREGOR.
875 Wayne avenue,
Indiana, Pa.

War—Again!

Parade: War? Don't ever blame any country for avoiding it. War never gains anyone anything, and never until you have your own loved ones taken from you by war can you know the suffering it brings. I am 14.

DORIL MILLER.
R. F. D. 1,
Trementon, Utah.

Parade: I think we should definitely keep out of foreign affairs. The winner of a war is usually the loser in the long run. In the World War the United States, France and England were the actual winners, but look at Germany now. If every country spent as much time tending to its own affairs as it does minding everybody else's, the world would be a much safer place in which to live.

RICHARD MURRAY.
2121 East Marshall street,
Richmond, Va.

Houses for Planes

Parade: I would say most definitely that the proposed 9,000 planes are unnecessary. As long as dictators rule Europe there will be danger of war. According to Reader Tobin we could build 10,000 in one year, if necessary. That fact shows we are well prepared. We should be more concerned with waging a war in every large city of our own country against slums. Our Government has already made gigantic steps toward slum clearance, but, of course, that demands a great deal of money. Therefore, I believe that any pin-money that the Government has lying around should be spent toward this great ideal. JOHN RALEIGH, JR.
19 Outlook avenue,
West Hartford, Conn.

Thanks

Parade: I want to thank all of the Paraders who answered my Help! Help! I received quite a few pictures of the movie stars I wanted.

DOT NEELD.
733 Second street,
Trenton, N. J.

Parade: Since you printed my Help! Help! I have more than doubled my postcard collection. I now have more than 600 and Paraders are adding to the number every day.

HERMAN RAMSEY.
304 Yadkin avenue,
Spencer, N. C.

Prize-Winners' Comments

Parade: I just wanted to thank you for the swell Mystery Prize. I received it today and it sure will come in handy. I think any boy or girl can win one if they get right down to it and write a jingle or a "Let's Go Traveling" idea. I know many of them are curious to find out what the prize is.

NANCY GILBERT.
3204 Klingle road,
Washington, D. C.

Parade: I received my Mystery Prize last week and I must say it is a grand prize for such a small idea. I wrote to an English boy whose name appeared in Parade. I hope he sees this and answers my letter. I am 16.

ANNETTE BALTHAZOR.
Campbell, Nebr.

Laura, Take a Bow

Parade: I think credit should be given Readeress Laura Dickson, of Anderson, S. C., who contributes so much to Parade. I am 17.

A Nation Dissolves

1 THE BARGAINING of the four major European powers at Munich on September 29, 1938, averted a world war but practically doomed Czecho-Slovakia to vassalage after 20 years of democratic freedom. Five days earlier, faced with the threat of German invasion and the combined pressure of Chamberlain and Daladier to accept a peaceful loss of Sudetenland, Premier Hodza resigned, and Gen. Jan Sirovy (right) took over the reigns of government both as premier and minister of defense. After the debacle of Munich, Hitler forced the election of a figurehead president, and M. Rudolf Beran (left), head of the new National Unity Party, succeeded Sirovy, who retained his post as head of the country's defense forces. Hitler moved last week to throw out both men after partioning the republic . . .

2 . . . INTO THREE PARTS, and establishing Mgr. Augustine Volosin (shown addressing the first meeting of the Slovakia parliament in Bratislava) as premier of Ruthenia, eastern segment of the dissolved nation. Below him are (left to right) Milos Vanco, Paul Teplansky, Premier Joseph Tiso, Ferdinand Durcansky and Prof. Matus Cermak, leaders of new Slovakia. Tiso's ouster as premier of autonomous Slovakia led to partition.

3 DISMEMBERMENT and dissolution. The map shows how Czecho-Slovakia, created 20 years ago after the World War as a democracy out of the shattered Austro-Hungarian empire, lost one-third of its territory when Hitler seized Sudetenland, Poland grabbed Teschen, and Hungary invaded a long strip along Slovakia and Ruthenia. Last week Hitler struck again, first creating three weak "independent" states, Bohemia-Moravia, Slovakia and Carpatho-Ukraine, taking more territory. Neighboring states followed suit, with the invaded tiny countries offering little resistance to Hungarian, Rumanian and Polish soldiers.

4 HUNGARIAN TROOPS are seen as they built a pontoon bridge across the Danube River the morning of November 5, after the Magyars had been awarded a strip of Czecho-Slovakia by Hitler, restoring most Hungarians to their ancestral country—along with a goodly number of other minorities who merely got new rulers. The bridge above crosses the river to the former Czech town of Medwed. The feast at Munich failed to satisfy completely the iridescent appetite of Hungary, which last week rushed forward for more spoils when Hitler started carving again.

6 CONTRASTING SCENES? But that was yesterday. Today the once quiet city of Zilina (above) in Northern Slovakia, home of a great shoe industry, is occupied by the German military, to frustrate the Poles and to assure domination of the area. The vast Skoda armament works (below) at Pilsen, on the Bohemia-Sudeten border, has also fallen under the control of the Third Reich's Fuehrer Nazi policy of "defense economy."

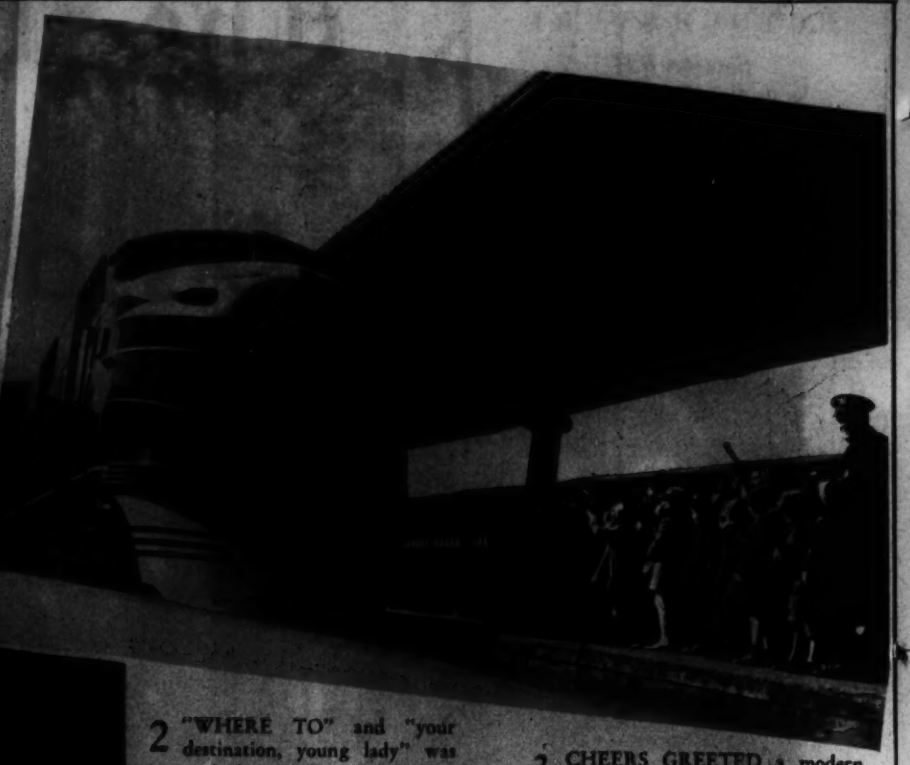
5 PRELUDE to "freedom." Nazis of Moravska-Ostrava (Machrisch Ostrau) are shown above preparing for arrival of German troops. Hitler ordered the Moravian city seized in a move to block Polish efforts for extension of their Teschen "conquest." At left, Slovakian police drive back a mob following demonstrations when the news reached Bratislava that a new Republic of Slovakia had been created. Not all the demonstrators in the Slovak capital were happy about the new-found independence.

To See Is to Know

IN line with the general policy of visual education adopted by Washington schools, first grade children of Barnard School recently enjoyed a session supplementary to their book learning when their teacher, Miss Hilda Wine, gathered her flock for a tour of Washington's railroad terminal.

1 STILL IN CLASS the Barnard School youngsters leave the school building for a bus trip to Union Station. Half of the children had never ridden in a train before, all were off to gain first-hand knowledge of trains and the men who operate them. Five mothers volunteered to accompany the youngsters on the trip arranged by their teacher, Miss Wine.



2 "WHERE TO" and "your destination, young lady" was repeated phonetically by the ticket seller who had thoughtfully provided a footstool. Each child stepped to the window and tendered his or her 6 cents for a half fare ticket to Hyattsville, Md.

3 CHEERS GREETED a modern "iron horse" when the Diesel-powered Columbian rolled into the station. The youngsters, 33 of 'em, all about 6 years of age, waited until the train came to a standstill and clambered aboard at the invitation of teacher and trainmen.

4 INSPECTING THE BIG TRAIN. Group of aspiring railroad engineers huddled about windows of an observation car after listening to descriptive talks by their teacher.

Post Staff Photos—Arthur Ellis.

5 AT THE THROTTLE. Engineman Charles Marsh, who pilots the train, gained popularity as he invited the youngsters into the cab for a view of the controls. Jane Darley, 6, was seated on his lap when photo at left was made.

6 CLOSER INSPECTION. Mechanic H. Oberender explains the operations and mechanical features of one of the trucks. Marilyn Warren and Billy Anderson are the interested pair.

7 THE THRILL OF THRILLS. Bobby Williams, 6, wearing one of the firemen's gloves, waves to his classmates from the cab of the President Buchanan, one of the crack trains that make the run between Washington and New York.

8 MAIL CAR. Railway Mail Clerks W. B. Wood and M. B. Zirkle took time out to explain to the children how their letters are sorted while the train is in transit.

9 COUNTING NOSES. Miss Wine, teacher of the first grade pupils, was kept busy at different intervals checking up on her charges to make sure they were all on hand when railroad employes and others explained features of our modern transportation methods.

10 HIS FIRST RIDE on a railroad train. Arnold Gedhardt, 6, with his nose glued to the window as the train pasted the Eckington yards. Most interesting features of the trip were the "electric eye" that opens the doors for the postoffice trucks at the terminal and the train whistle.

11 "HYATTSVILLE, ALL OUT FOR HYATTSVILLE," was the announcement that sent the youngsters scurrying to opposite ends of the coach. The history of rail travel, beginning with the "Iron Horse," and continuing to the present streamlined trains, was explained during the the course of the trip.

12 HEADIN' HOME. At Hyattsville a chartered bus was on hand to carry the children back to Barnard School, where a hot lunch awaited them. Billy Setter, Sandra Wool, Tallulah Needle and Sheldon Schlossberg are the quartet shown above gathered on the back seat, singing school songs.

U. S. Exhibits For World Fair

HUGE DIORAMAS PREPARED BY GOVERNMENT ARTISTS

After months of tedious work, a number of dioramas, some of which are 30 feet long, have been carefully divided into sections and shipped for exhibition at the New York World Fair, where they will be housed in the Federal Building. Some portray the production and distribution of foodstuffs throughout the Nation, others show the results of conservation practices adopted by various Government agencies. They also depict transportation methods of different periods along with changes in industrial sections and mining areas.

PETER PAN RETURNS TO FLICKERS

The cute little fellow shown at left is no fellow at all, but boyish Betty Bronson, petite film actress, as she appeared 14 years ago, when she played the title role in the movie version of "Peter Pan." Her elfin charm has developed into mature loveliness, and she is shown at right, again in Hollywood, where she will essay a come-back in the movies.

MAPLE SYRUP

1 TYPICAL SUGAR CAMP is shown at left. Worker above, tapping a tree, inserts a metal spile and leaver a bucket to catch the liquid. Sugar, soft and black maple are the trees found in this area. Once a day the sugar water is collected (below) from the pails that have protective covers and poured into buckets.

WHEN the month of March rolls round residents of Garrett County, Md., the only county in the State that produces maple syrup commercially, renew seasonal activities in a strip of mountain woodland in the Alleghanies where the "sugar water" starts dripping early. During this period last year those employed in the industry marketed 25,000 gallons of syrup and 20,000 pounds of maple sugar having a gross value of $75,000. That the product is the best is evidenced by the fact that last year five carloads were shipped to Vermont.

2 AFTER the gathering process, a collecting tank picks up the colorless fluid. Many of the workers drink this liquid as they would water. Colorless, it has a slightly sweet taste.

3 PROCESSING must be done as quickly as possible after the juice has been gathered. If it stands long a poor quality of syrup is the result. Emptied into the evaporating tanks it is boiled over a wood fire.

4 CONSTANT observation of progress is necessary. Operator is taking a reading with hydrometer which must read 32 at the boiling point, 217°F. This insures uniformity of quality, and comes within requirements of Government.

5 AFTER syrup has been drawn off and filtered through a felt strainer, the solid material "sugar sand" is cleaned out. Great care is taken not to let the "water" or syrup come in contact with lead. All the vats are made of copper.

6 CANNING FOR SHIPPING. Roy Harvey is filling gallon cans to be sent to regular customers. Individual owners operate, each setting up his own camp. Some camps tap as many as 3,500 trees.

7 WOMEN DO THEIR BIT by filling the small bottles after supper dishes have been put away. They do not forget that members of their own household relish pancakes covered with syrup, so there is always a good stock in the cupboard. The young man of the mountains shown in photo at right prefers to take his straight.
